

The Radical.

Of horrible stuff is a Radical made, Of avarice, selfishness, hate and hypocrisy...

Religion with him is the slippery slime, The bon his prey before gulping bel-lavers;

A patriot he when gold's the reward, Of loyalty's duty all day he will gabble;

How glibly he speaks of the will of the Lord, When scheming to compass ends worthy the devil;

Of temperance, how it delights him to preach, And fence with rules stringent his poor neighbors throttle;

When Liberty suits his own purpose, how warm He grows in her praises—her very phase blesses;

That more than the bond pays when he is the lender, But always is ready excuses to find

This impudent trickster, this double-tongued knave, In God's name solicits a new lease of plunder;

A Wife Goes After Her Husband's Dead Body and Finds Him the Head of a New Household.

The New Orleans papers tell of an unsoldierly trick, played by one Captain Huckle, formerly of Springfield Massachusetts.

Soon after, he married a New Orleans lady, resigned his commission, and began speculating in cotton in which he has been very successful.

In the spring of 1863, home for interment. But surprising as it may appear, the grave of the deceased could not be found.

Inquiries were set on foot, and the street and number of his residence were found. In company with the chief the widow visited the house, and was hospitably received by the rosy faced matron of the relative.
