A SETTLER.

A democratic subscriber of the Reporter loaned a radical $100 in paper a home among yoh. Go abroad for handsome purse which was neade up and took his note; when the latter became due, the democrat demanded his money, when the following conversation ensued:

the $100 is due, I need the money and demand the amount in gold.

I'll pay you gold for the paper I got of half a dozen families who would from you, why that would be making have located at this place a year ago, my debt over one third larger.

Here is the bond question in a nutshel, "darned if it's just to pay the bondholder in gold for what was got from him in paper"-it is making the debt one third heavier. But this is the radical policy and Grant advocates and hope the disease may be contait flat-footed in his inaugural.

GRANT AS A CABINET MAKER.

President Grant once followed tanuing, but was so poor a hand that he had to abandon it. As a cabinet maker he even fares worse, for his work did not stand as many days as it takes a pup to get its eyes open-the new cabinet broke down in less than five days and had to be completely remodeled.

On our outside will be found Grant's second attempt at cabinet making-or the re-constructed cabinet. Should the the other hand, may be the means of anything of recent date. GRANT VS. HIS INAUGURAL.

President Grant has already turned against his inaugural, and that instrument itself contains some glaring inconsistencies which we shall point out to the readers of the Reporter. In his inaugural Grant says:

abilities of the act of 1789, which has the signature fo George Washington, and which was wisely intended to provide against just such appointees as Grant to the Senate, he asked "that Stewart. This law Grant did not wish Mr. Stewart be exempted" from the to execute, but asked congress to set it operation of the eighth section of the seat nearly lost his wife, who fell into aside, and thus defeat the very purpose that body, he has "the honor to request tate.
