TENNESSEE RADICALISM.
Corpet Beggars, Stalwarts and Niggers in Convention—A Grand Row.

The telegraph has given us but a brief outline of the scenes enacted last week in the uproarous radical Convention at Nashville, and we propose to supply the deficit by copyifing the following extracts from the report of the Cincinnati Commercial, a paper that was never known to sympathize with the Democracy. The report says: Here the confusion and noise became indescribable. I never heard anything that approached it before, in point of strength and volume, and old politicians who have grown gray in the service, say that it is beyond anything in their experience. Cate tried to appeal to their reason, and asked if they didn't want to behave like decent white men. This was the signal for a fresh outbreak. 'Cries of "Do you mean to insult the colored delegates?" arose from all parts of the house. We're as white as you are,' screamed the negroes, until their faces were neither white or black, but red. Poor Senator Cate only used the term "white men" as a sort of comparison, but he got his foot in and the Convention would not listen while he got it out. Here confusion became worse confounded. Not one less than a dozen men, some white and others black, were mounted upon tables and desks, all fiercely speaking and gesticulating at once. Men were denounced as liars and fools, but were seemingly indifferent thereto, as they did not hear the complaint. An old man whose gray hairs should have commanded respect, and did command silence for a few seconds, pointed to the portrait of Lincoln, which hangs in the hall, and said "that is a wonder that it did not fall upon the disgraceful scene." Here the yells, for "Butler," "Pearne," and "Order" set in again, one man leading off by saying that old Abe might grow and be d---d, he was not going to be run over by a set of G---d d---d political hucks, and was ready to fight it out on that line, regardless of the time it might take. A very sensible negro, being sagacious enough to see that nothing could be done with three chairmen, all determined to act in that capacity at once, moved "Dat we do now adjourn, and was rewarded for his praiseworthy effort in behalf of peace by being pulled over the desk backward. As he struck on his head, however, he was not hurt. Here the irrepressible Pearne made another effort to remain the Convention of his existence. Drawing himself up to his full height, screamed, "Gentlemen, I will be heard," and putting as much breadth behind the word "will" as would be necessary to preach an ordinary sermon. The Stokes men were equally determined that he should not be heard, and they carried the day. All this time Cate kept rapping his gavel with commendable perseverance. Henry Dutch, of Chattanooga, mounted a desk at the back end of the hall, and spoke for full ten minutes, apparently boiling over with rage, but nobody paid any attention to him, except an old white-headed negro, who pointed to the eloquent but excited Dutch, and requested the Convention, in a loud voice, to "Listen to that d---d fool." But they would not. And thus matters went on (or rather didn't go) for two hours and a half. It was one continued scene of confusion. The three chairmen all tried to act at once. Nothing whatever was accomplished. The galleries were crowded to suffocation by men who watched the combined circus and menagerie below with the liveliest interest. How long this might have continued, I know not, had it not been for Butler and David Nelson getting into a fight. Nelson approached Butler, who was trying to act as chairman, and words ensued, the import of which nobody knows, when they clinched, and would have rolled over on the floor had not the crowd been so great that they could not. And here ensued a scene such as is not witnessed often. Everybody rushed pell-mell over the desks, pistols and knives were drawn, and, if ten or fifteen police had not been in the room, there would have been blood shed. It was a hard matter to tell who was fighting, and who was trying to part those who were fighting. Some rushed out, believing that there would be a general fight, and others rushed in, believing the same thing, and wanting to take part in it. More police made their appearance, and after a good deal of pulling and hauling, sweating and swearing, R. R. Butler, member of Congress, and David Nelson, of Knoxville, were marched off under guard, each accompanied by a number of "friends." And now ensued a scene of indescribable confusion. Twenty or thirty were on the floor at once (or rather upon the desks), and the display of passion was terrific. An old negro, who had apparently been well raised, proposed that "De vention now open with prayer." A delegate—"Yes, old man, a prayer would be a d---d good thing. Grind on, brother Pearne." A voice—"G---d d---d old Pearne, he can't pray." Another—"No, but he can act the d---d fool." A delegate—"Gentlemen, this 'ere is disgraceful. Les' join or else do something. Stokes and Senter are both good men. I am willing for either."

Here was interrupted by a colored gentleman, with his kinky hair parted in the middle, who raised to a "pin" of order. "D---n you and your order, you black rascal, set down or I'll knock yer down." A delegate—"Gentlemen, for God's sake—"

Say for old Pearne's sake, he's running this machine." Brownlow—"I will be heard—" "No you want—the Brownlow family's played out." Cate—"Please listen to me one moment. [Interrupted by cries of "Pearne, Pearne." I have only to say—[D---n you and your say.] I believe—"

Here he was completely drowned out and forced to give up.

Pearne advanced toward the Speaker's stand and endeavored to say something, but he only got out, "Whither, ah, whither are we drifting?" when a negro answered, "To h---ll," which was followed by a roar of laughter, and cries of "Butler," "Butler," Butler essayed to speak, but the Senter men told him to shut up his d---d red mouth, and cheered lustily for Pearne.

Here a man fell off a desk, and the cry of "a fight," "a fight," was raised, which brought the police and everybody else pell-mell on to the unfortunate man.

A young fellow mounted a desk and commenced denouncing Stokes, when the Stokes man yelled, "take him down: take him to his mother," etc., amid the jeers of the negroes, who cried out, "Stokes ain't like Senter, he didn't have to have his difficulties removed."

A delegate—"Disabilities, you G---d d---d fool." A voice—"Who removed Butler's disabilities? He used to be a rebel." Another voice—"It's a G---d d---d infernal lie." Here everything went into confusion worse confounded: at least fifty men all talking at once, and some getting ready to try a knock down argument of the fist. Cate—"I have a paper—"

Several voices—"Go to h---ll with your paper." A voice—"But it's important, and—"

Voices—"Then let a white man read it. We don't want to hear you." [Cheers, groans and laughter.] Cate—"It's a dispatch from Governor Sprague to workingmen." Voices—"G---d d---d Sprague and you, too." Another voice—"Give it to a man who can read." [Laughter.] A negro—"What's Sprague got to do with this vention?" A delegate about two-thirds drunk "Three cheers for Senter, and d---n the Duncan letter." [Cheers.] Butler—"Silence till the dispatch is read." [Groans for Butler and cheers for Pearne.] A voice—"Cate can't read—give it to a nigger." Another—"Let's buy Stokes and Cate a spelling book." Another—"Let 'em alone and they'll steal one." Cate—"I will now read the dispatch, and—"

Delegate from Chattanooga (very hoarse: "No, you won't; you're played out; we don't want to hear you." Negro: "Let the gen'ral read." White delegate: "Yes, let him read about the Stokes-Cate conspiracy. That's what we want to hear." A voice: "Where's the school fund? Cate here began reading the dispatch from Sprague in a loud voice. The substance of it was that the man who killed Abbott would address the citizens of Nashville on Monday night. Delegate: "Less nominate Sprague for Governor." Another: "No, less nominate Enos Hopkins." [Great laughter and cheers.] An old man: "Gentlemen, I—" Here he was interrupted by shouts of "Put him down!" "Take him out!" A voice: "Let the d---d old fool go on." Delegate—"Cate, I apologize to Sprague for not listening to the dispatch, but not to you, G---d d---n him." Mr. Williams [in the speaker's stand]—"I would, to—"

Voices—"Dry up, you old bald-headed devil." Go back to Ohio, and stop making your living by swindling poor folks." A negro—"I move that we adjourn now adjourn." Another—"Where to?" White man—"To hell." Voices—"We're already there." Another voice—"Then I hope old Pearne will burn up, G---d d---n him." Delegate—"Pearne, why the h---ll don't you fight?" Negro—"He wouldn't fight a bob-tailed cat."

Here a large fine looking mulatto got upon a desk, and, with tears in his eyes, asked if the Convention would hear him. Cries of "Yes," "no," "take him out," etc., but the mulatto maintained his ground, and, as the confusion subsided a little, he said that he hoped he would never see such a day again, and that his ears might never again hear what they had this day been compelled to listen to. "White men," said he, "colored men look to you for example, but I want you to follow you no longer if this is the way you are going to act. It seems as though the voice of that martyred man, pointing to the portrait of Lincoln, would cry from the grave at such a scene as this. My white friends, I am ashamed of you, and so is every decent colored man in the house. I say to my people, beware, oh, beware, of following after the white man." This little speech produced a sensation. Silence reigned for the space of a minute, and it seemed as though the truths he had spoken had sunk deep into the hearts of his hearers. But soon the tumult began again, and raged worse than ever.

Catholic Supremacy.
As, during the late rebellion, certain religious dispensers of radical political nostrums alarmed and misled the people for "reasons of state," so, also, for like political designs, are certain clergymen throughout the country attempting to show that the Roman Catholic church aims at political and religious supremacy in this country, and that its existence and increase menace our republican system of government. In the leading cities of the Union much has been said upon this question, of late, by clergymen of evangelical denominations, and preachers of what is termed liberal Christianity have joined in the discussion. Sunday newspapers, both political and religious, have also taken up the matter, and have threatened it very seriously, and as if there were good reasons to apprehend a domination by the Roman Catholic church in our governmental affairs. The publicity and prominence which have recently been given to such fears would indicate that the church against whom such war is made has lately given some evidence of the purpose attributed to it, and thus caused fresh alarms in all sections of the country. As yet, however, no proof has been presented that the pope, or any persons acting under him, contemplate any change in the policy or management of the churches, so far as this country is concerned, or intend to do aught else "than keep the tenor or their way," in the conduct of the religious interests confided to their charge, and with which they are peculiarly identified and interested. The Catholic church in common with all others is working, and perhaps more zealously than the majority of other denominations, to enlarge its numbers, to plant itself in new fields, to extend its influence and power, and bring men into subjection to its doctrine and authority; but its past history in this country affords no warrant for the belief that it aspires to control of the government. Indeed, in the bitter and turbulent partisan warfare which convulsed the nation during our late civil war, and which caused such angry and vindictive feelings that our newspapers daily recorded murders on account of political opinions, that church kept itself above the political strife raging around it, and confined itself strictly to its appropriate religious functions. The members of no other denomination more freely offered their lives to defend the Union during the rebellion, and that political system, and those principles of religious freedom for plotting the overthrow of which the church now stands accused. In this country political issues have not been dragged into the pulpits of the Catholic church to the exclusion of Christianity, and under her austerely political hatreds have not been lashed into a fury which made men ripe for deeds of blood. The influence, may, even the absolute authority, which the church has exercised in other times and other governments as well as in matters pertaining only to religion, form no foundation whatever for the charge that Roman Catholicism now contemplates the establishment of an empire which will be supreme in political and religious affairs. The attempt to fasten upon it such a purpose by quoting its history hundreds of years ago is dabbling in sophistry to sustain a groundless charge, and is an attempt to stir up animosity in a way which christians and gentlemen ought to be ashamed. The fact is plain that the authority of the church in civil governments is daily diminishing in the only European nations where it attempts to exercise such authority. Our Christian friends suffering from fear of Roman Catholic supremacy in this country may dismiss their forebodings. The Church will enlarge its borders, and root itself more firmly as the years go by sustained and strengthened by such fanatical zeal as made Loyala immortal, and has conferred dignity on the crimes of the Jesuitism. It will win golden opinions from candid opponents by apostles whose lives of self-sacrifice will compare with those of La Salle and Marquette. It will entrench itself in our cities and where the appurtenances and results of culture are thickest, and it will send its missionaries among our Indian tribes and half-civilized negroes of the south, and will win them to a faith whose imposing ceremonial and guards of conscience are guarantees against apostasy. It will labor with that zeal, and policy, and determination which have always marked its history, and which have brought it to the strength and grandeur of its position to day. All this it will do, but it will not lay its hands upon true democracy or true republicanism, because these, in this country, are necessary to its growth. Here it can best enlarge itself by moderation and religious freedom. It is without allies, and the hands of all other denominations are against it. It does not entertain so wild a hope as to overthrow them all, and therefore must demand that there shall be no established church. This must be its policy, and who shall presume to say that the policy is not in accordance with its wishes? Shall it be the descendants of those who framed the early Puritan codes, speaking of the church planted on our coast by the noble and tolerant Baltimore?

A MODEL REPUBLICAN.
That intense laborer of the British aristocrats, the Hon. Zach. Chandler, of Michigan, is about to astonish the enemies of the United States in England by a demonstration of the simplicity of a true American republican. He is now in New York making preparations for a visit to Europe. The Detroit Free Press has the following account of the style in which the Hon. Zachariah means to present himself among the proud noblemen of the eticte countries of the old world: His wife and daughter each take with them a colored female servant, and he takes two black male servants. These servants are to be fitted out while in New York with a very showery livery. The coats of the men servants are to be a lavender color, with white buttons, upon which is the Michigan coat of arms, except that the staffs support the letter C. which is of red enamel, with gold edge. The female servants wear large belt buckles bearing the same design as that upon the buttons. The hats of the men are black, with a wide purple band, and a large silver cockade in the centre of which is one of the buttons aforesaid. The advocates of the new Empire will be delighted with the start thus made by the Michigan republican. Under the new regime he will, in consideration of his high position in the party, have the rank of Marshal of the Empire with the proud title of Grand Duke of Michigan. It is impossible to imagine the feelings of envy which will fill the hearts of the British aristocrats when the noble Chandler, attended by this gorgeous retinue, makes his appearance among the fashionable of London Mail. They will then believe that we are a truly great people.—Patriot.

Important to Holders of Government Bonds.
The recent robberies of large amounts of Government Coupon Bonds, make it all important that the public should understand the only secure way of holding Government Securities is by having them registered properly, since, in case of loss, theft or destruction, the investor is still safe, as the Government will continue to pay the interest and will issue a new bond at the proper time. With regard to the Coupon Bond, it is however entirely different, as it is a total loss to the owner in case it is stolen, lost or destroyed, it being regarded by the Government as the same as a Bank Note. Some parties have the impression that Registered Bonds are more troublesome, and the interest more difficult to collect—is an error; the interest on Registered Bonds can be made payable at any of the principal towns in the Union, and collected without regard to the locality of the owner, and the Bonds can be transferred the same as Coupon Bonds, by signing in blank before any Notary or Attorney.

A most startling tragedy occurred at Rockport, Illinois, yesterday. A woman named Dixon shot and killed her husband, Banks J. Dixon, under the following circumstances, Dixon, and his wife had lived unhappily for some time, when, finally, on real or imaginary causes, she left him, going to father's house in the country. She returned a short time since, stopped at the house of a friend, and was confined with child. The husband made frequent attempts to see her after this event for the purpose, it is supposed, to gain possession of the child. It was finally arranged that he should visit her on a certain day, which was yesterday. While in the chamber with his wife, and standing by the bedside the babe in his arms, his back toward the bed, his wife, who appeared to be perfectly calm, without emotion or excitement, suddenly rose, and fired two shots, one of which passed entirely through his body, passing near the region of the heart, causing death in a about half an hour.

If You do not feel well, you send for a doctor, he calls upon you, looks wise sticks the head of his cane, scrawls some hieroglyphs upon a piece of paper which you take to a drug store, and there pay 50 cts. to $1.00 besides the doctor fee, for a remedy nine times out of ten not half as good as Judson's Mountain Herb Pills, which is only 25 cts. per box. Do you think the former the best because you pay the most for it, if you do we advise you to use just for an experiment the Judson's Mountain Herb Pills, and see for yourself, that they are one of the best family medicines compounded they cure Headache, Indigestion, Biliousness, Jaundice, and all Female Irregularities. Give the Mountain Herb Pills a trial. Sold by all Dealers.

Ex-Governor Curtin, Minister to Russia, has accepted an invitation from a large number of leading citizens of Philadelphia to a complimentary banquet at the Academy of Music on June 12th. The affair is expected to be the finest of the kind ever given here. Both branches of the city councils on Thursday last offered Governor Curtin the use of the Independence Hall to receive citizens previous to his departure, and this reception will also take place on the 12th of June.

A Virginia paper contains a card from an "F. F. V." claiming that cock fighting is a very improving sport, and that eating the eggs of game chickens "makes them plucky, punctilious, and sensitive for their honor."

Welles, Radical candidate for Governor of Virginia, pronounces Grant "an ass, and what is worse, a drunken ass." His account of his interview with the President is thus given in the Petersburg Express: When we entered the room, he was leaning over the table, with a cigar in his mouth, and his chin resting on both hands. His eyes were fishy, and he ineffectually attempted to rise as we came in. We introduced our business at once. "Mr. Welles," said he, "my desire is peace and harmony throughout the country, and I will even sacrifice my principles (if I have any) to secure these things. Of course, as far as I can do so, without interfering with my main purpose, I will favor you as a good Republican; but you must not expect me to venture the success of my administration in your behalf. I consider that the Virginians themselves are chiefly to be consulted in this matter, not you. I say this after due deliberation, and I shall put the same views before my Cabinet."

ANIMAL LIFE is full of corruption and we can only hope to escape the ills which flesh is heir to by a judicious use of the remedies in nature's store-house. In all the time which has past since the world began, mankind has given great attention and some of its best talent to the study of medicine. While this sacrifice has not been wholly in vain, the facts elicited are few and mostly unsatisfactory. Among the truths which have been elicited is this, "that if we keep the blood pure we must be healthy." To purify the blood there is no medicine equal to Morse's Indian Root Pills, as thousands of testimonials will verify. Use Morse's Pills if you wish to regain and retain your health.—Morse's Pills are the best medicine for all Female Irregularities, Liver Complaints, Indigestion, Biliousness, Dyspepsia, Headache, &c. Sold by all Dealers.

It appears that Muligan, the circus rider, did not die in Paris, Kentucky, as reported. He sprained his foot instead of breaking his neck, and was well in an hour.

COMPLETION OF THE PACIFIC RAILROAD.
Great Rush to Sternbergs.
Sung to the Tune of Yankee Doodle.
The Great Pacific Railroad's laid.
From ocean unto ocean,
And now complete connection's made,
An enterprising man.
The mighty work at last is done,
So speedily and with such oom,
And now in two days we can run
From here to San Francisco.
No more we take the ancient route,
The stage, a horrid slow thing;
It banged the passenger about,
And wore out all their clothing.
Chorus, for the end of each verse:
The Great Pacific Railroad's laid,
From ocean unto ocean,
And now complete connection's made,
A most delightful deed.
