The facts, as we have learned them from intimate friends of the deceased are about as follows: For two or three years past it has been noticed that the young man held peculiar views upon various subjects, and especially upon religion and his future state, but it was not surmised that they were imbedded very deeply, much less to such an extent as to derange his mind. On the contrary, being more than usually gifted with intelligence and acuteness, credit was given him for more than the average amount of com-

after truth. To such an extent did he become absorbed in some of the mysticisms and misfortune he became impressed with the idea that he had some special re-ligious task to perform, which could leave him under the impression that their presence was unknown to all but himself, yet he refrained from partak-
