

Bread and Cheese and Kisses.
One day, when I came home fatigued,
And felt inclined to grumble,
Because my lot was one of toil,
Because my life was humble,
I said to Kate, my darling wife,
In whom my whole life's bliss lies,
"What have you got for dinner, Kate?"
"Why bread and cheese and Kisses."

Though worn and tired, my heart leaped up,
As those plain words he uttered,
Why should I envy those whose bread
Thou mine's more thickly breasted?
I said, "I will have dessert at once."
"What's that?" she asked, "Why, this,
I kissed her. Ah, what sweeter meat
Than bread and cheese and Kisses?"
I gazed at her with pure delight;
She nodded and smiled gayly,
I said, "My love on such a meal
I'd dine with pleasure daily.
When I but think of you, dear girl,
I pity those fine misses
Who turn their noses up and pout
At bread and cheese and Kisses."
"And when I look on your dear form,
And on your face so homely,
And when I look in your dear eyes,
And on your dress so comely,
And when I hold you in my arms,
I laugh at Fortuna's misses,
I'm blest in you, content with you,
And bread and cheese and Kisses."

The Canada Fires.
An Ottawa correspondent who paid a visit to the burnt district lying northwest of the village of Hull, thus speaks of the GENERAL DESTRUCTION.

In some places where there had been woods on either side of the road we saw green spots which the flames had leaped over in their headlong fury, and trees, almost unscathed standing amidst charred and blackened trunks. Elsewhere the work of destruction had been complete. Nothing had escaped. Not only was the surface soil consumed, leaving the ground black and bare; the trees stripped of their leaves and every vestige of vegetation; but here and there the wind had torn up the trunks by the roots, and thrown them into great heaps like stalks of grain behind the reaper. There were many broad fields dotted, at considerable distances apart, by dugstumps, and every stump had been wrapped in flames. The cedar fences along the roads, around the houses, dividing fields, and forming the boundaries of different farms, were reduced to faint lines of white ashes, with only occasionally a bit of charred wood to be seen. These fences carried the flames to many places which would otherwise have escaped. Indeed, the farm-houses, which from their position, would have been considered most secure, were destroyed, almost without exception. Solitary chimneys were seen standing in the centre of extensive fields, far away from the blazing woods. Here and there a barn or dairy was left standing, and furnished shelter to the farmers and their families. Others were living under tents supplied by the Canadian government, or had constructed rude huts of logs and boards. On one farm the barn had ignited three times, and the fire was smothered with sand there being no water obtainable. Another little group of buildings appeared to have been saved only by a miracle, for they had been surrounded on three sides by flames, which were at times not half a dozen rods distant. Not an orchard escaped, and it was a common sight to see trees filled with baked fruit. We drove into the grounds of what had been a summer residence, where nothing was left but the chimneys, cellar-walls, a wash-tub (the bottom of which had burned out), and the remains of a cooking stove. Everything had been consumed in an incredibly short space of time, and the family escaped only by taking refuge in a field of green buckwheat. Near here an old man was burned to death in the public road, some remains of clothing still marking the spot where his body was found.

Victor Hugo's Address to the Advancing German Host.
Victor Hugo has written an address to the Germans, of which the following is an extract:

"You may take the fortress. You will find the rampart. You may take the rampart. You will find the barricade. And then who knows the resources of patriotism in distress. You may find the sewers mines of powder ready to blow the whole streets into the air. This will be the terrible sentence you must accept. To take Paris stone by stone; to slaughter Europe on the spot, to kill France in each street, in each house. The great light must extinguish itself by soul German! Hold back! Paris formidable! Think a while before her walls! All transformations are possible for her! In her indolence she gives you the measure of her energy. She seems to sleep. She will awake. Her thought will leap from its scabbard like a sword, and the city which was yesterday her Syzybe to tomorrow may be her Sargasso."

When an Officer can make an Arrest.
A party tried at the recent court in Montgomery county, for assaulting an officer had the point in his defence that the officer had no warrant for his arrest, whereupon the Court defined the rights and duty of police officers as follows:

An officer, as any private citizen, has the right and it is his duty to prevent a crime with or without a warrant; and where a breach of the peace is imminent he ought to interfere and arrest the offenders; and when he sees an assault committed he ought to make an arrest and follow in pursuit, with or without a warrant. Whenever the officer has the offender within his view at the time of committing the offence he has the right to make the arrest with or without a warrant. He has the power when the offence is committed in his view, but when he acts on the information of others he must have a proper authority. In this case the officer saw the assault or fight, which was stopped by his approach. He had the right to arrest the offenders.

A short time since Mr. Knott was tried in an interior county of Georgia for a violation of law. The verdict of the jury was: "We find the defendant Knott guilty." The judge was at a loss whether to sentence or not.

Geneva, Switzerland, September 15.—A telegram from Chamouille states that a party of tourists, numbering eleven persons, while undertaking the perilous feat of ascending Mount Blanc, were swallowed up by an avalanche, none escaping. Two of the adventurers were Americans, named Bean and Kenda.

The printing of all the papers in the State Department bearing upon the Alabama claims, called for by a resolution of the Senate last winter, has just been completed. They make five volumes of 760 pages each, beginning with the correspondence between Mr. Bluck and Minister Dallas in 1861, when the recognition of belligerency was declared in Paris, and run through all the diplomatic discussions of neutrality, rebuffs in Canada, rebel cruisers and kindred subjects until the matter of the Alabama claims proper is reached on page 2,000.

Dr. Lankester, in Nature, concludes, from the best statistics yet collected, that a person 5 feet in height ought to weigh 115 pounds; and that, for each additional inch in height, five pounds ought to be added to the weight; so that the proper weight of a man 6 feet high is 135 pounds. If the weight is more than this rule indicates, he is deficiently fed; if it is less, he is overfed. The deficiency of food or the excess of it, which may be due to disease or to unwholesome food, may be corrected by a judicious diet, but more commonly from an excess of fat.

Some may know the story of the first weeping willow, introduced into England by the poet Pope, who found one twig in a basket of figs that had been given him, putting out a bud; and having planted it in his garden, reared it to a tree, whence all those beautiful trees in this country, have been propagated. The weeping willow of Twickenham is no more; but its graceful offspring, bending over many a stream, live far and wide. So many a tree, slight in the outset, conveyed or sprung up by seeming chance, has led to inventions.

The carpet bag governments in the South are just now gashing fits from the radical new speakers of the North. The New York Sun, follows suit, with the Times, Tribune, and many other leading radical papers in the North in the following:

The fruits of the carpet bag reign of the last five years are what might have been expected. The world may be searched in vain for governments so immoral, so shamelessly corrupt, so hopelessly rotten, as those now prevailing in the South. Politically they may be changed; but this cannot cure one of the sorest evils already inflicted. These scamps have run the States they rule ruinously into debt. The legislature controlled by them have pigged the States to the discharge of pecuniary obligations of crushing weight, to the future redemption of an enormous amount of bonds, and to the imposition of onerous taxes through a series of years. This has been done in furtherance of all sorts of schemes whereby the authors reap present wealth and anticipate larger gains in the immediate future. These burdens have already seriously embarrassed all of these States, and will nigh bankrupted some of them; and to save them from ruin the reign of the carpet bag robbers must be speedily brought to an end.

There was a small but interesting outbreak of hostilities at the Military Academy at West Point last Saturday, in which the colored troops fought with their accustomed valor. We gather our report of the transaction from one who was an eye witness to the events that immediately followed it. About five o'clock in the afternoon, one of the youngest and smallest cadets, who proved to be young Wilson from Wyoming happened to get into an altercation with the able-bodied colored cadet Smith, at the ice-water tank on the parade ground, about who should drink first, or something of that kind, and the negro struck Wilson on the head with the cocoanut dipper, cutting a gash in his forehead, and causing the blood to flow in a stream from the wound. The wounded boy was taken off the ground by his companions, and the negro was placed under arrest—the general impression, however, being that nothing would be done with him, although his offence is one of the gravest violations of the discipline and courtesy of the institution. The feeling amongst the cadets over the affair was very strong, though there had been no formal exhibition of it. The repugnance of the white cadets to the negro does not abate with the lapse of time. He is a common consent, cut by all the others. Young Niles, son of Judge Nathaniel Niles, a prominent citizen of Belleville, Illinois, has the honor of sitting next him on one side at the table, and though his father is an extreme Radical, the young Illinoisian is not pleased by the juxtaposition, nor with the political arrangement that caused it. Smith, the colored cadet, daily receives letters from the advocates of social equality in all parts of the country, exhorting him to "stand firm" as the representative of a principle which they are resolved to force into the academy; the number of these letters makes it the largest received by any cadet at the institution. There is a feeling among the cadets that the academy authorities have been awed into making concessions in favor of the negro by the constant menace of a Congressional Committee held over them; they say he ought to have been severely punished, and perhaps expelled, for striking young Wilson, but that instead of this he could be easily let off, because the infliction of the proper punishment would be denounced in Radical circles, and in Congress as personal injustice to the negro. One question that has not yet presented itself, is discussed by the cadets with a good deal of animation. After having been one year in the academy, the cadets have the privilege of giving and attending the stylish and fashionable balls which have long been a social feature of the institution and of West Point. No distinction is made at these balls, and no cadet is debarred from them; but the admission of Cadet Smith is a horse of another color; and although the question will not actually present itself for a year to come, the students are asking themselves how they are to solve it. To exclude him would be a breach of the established etiquette of the academy; and to admit him, with the concomitant privilege of bringing with him his colored partner to share the festivities of the weekly balls, would be a complete recognition of negro equality that they are not prepared for, nor willing to submit to.

The "Little Giant" THE BEST
For pointing rails, sawing firewood, and all kinds of sawing, such as LATH, PALING, SHINGLES, &c., while for boring and mortising all kinds of timber, including Fence Posts, it is today without an equal. The time has come when almost every Farmer wants a machine for all kinds of sawing, mortising, &c. To all I would say, don't buy before seeing the LITTLE GIANT.

It has advantages possessed by no similar Machine, among which are the following:

It is very small, light and strong, without any unnecessary gearing, is furnished with a Fly-wheel for sawing and also one for boring, making the motion regular enough for railway or any other power, without worrying the horses. It has a larger capacity than any similar machine, being capable of sawing 3 to 4 cords of wood, twice through, per hour, and boring 75 to 100 fence posts in the same time.

It takes only two men to run it in any position. It points all kinds of rails ready to put in the fence and mortises posts ready to set up, at the rate of 50 to 60 per post per day. No matter how crooked the posts are, it will mortise them with equal facility.

THE LITTLE GIANT
Is always ready to run against any similar machine.

Its superiority is established. It is impossible to get out of order and there is no wearing out to it. Fixtures for sawing shingles are always put on when desired. Capacity, 5000 to 8000 per day.

THE LITTLE GIANT was Patented April 24, '62 and sold in every County where it has been exhibited. For township rights or machines apply to which now stands unrivalled. This Reaper has advantages over all other Reapers now manufactured. One advantage we claim for it, is the lever power, by which we gain one hundred per cent over other machines. Another advantage is the hoisting and lowering apparatus, whereby the driver has under his complete control of the machine; in coming to a spot of lodged grain, the driver can change the cut of the machine in an instant, without stopping the team, varying the stubble from 1 to 14 inches at the outside of the machine, as well as on the inside. It is constructed of first class material; and built by first class machinists. We warrant it second to none.
