Newspaper Advertising .- A correspondent of the New York Tribune writes to that paper as follows, and we would com-mend what he says to all sensible business

Some time during the year 1859, while in charge of the advertising of a Broadway house, I caused the insertion of a lengthy one time announcement in all the editions of The Tribune, at a cost of $600, and was closely questioned by my employer as to the wisdom of so large an expenditure in one newspaper. He thought me unreas onably extravagant, and would not be satisfied until I showed him, by actual figures, that the more cost of paper and printing the ordinary circulars we were then using (estimating for as many circulars as I knew there were Tribunes printed) fully qualed the sum that I had paid you .-Thus it will be seen that if I had expended $600 in circulars, I must still have been at an additional expense to have distributed

Many a business man is afraid of the expense of advertising, and yet will pay high rents for a prominent store to exhibit his wares, and put up expensive signs, and seems not to know that both are expensive methods of advertising.

The instances of men who have made fortunes by advertising are too numerous to question; but how have they done it? By how, where and when to advertise. The whole secret is there. Advertising has be come a science, and unless its principles they have time to bestow to it. Hence many large houses find it profitable to empioy competent men who make it their
