has discharged so well and so entirely to the satisfaction of all concerned. I have no desire to write a long and weari some essay on the subject; inevertheless, it appears to me a proper opportunity to ask attention to a very few remarks upon some of the uses of associations such as the Young Men's Mercantile Library and Mechanics' Institute. The constitution of the Institute declares its object to be "the promotion of information on all subjects of useful knowledge." cimens of manufactures, of minerals, models of inventions, and lectures, are of course among the means to be used by the Institute; but still it seeks to accomplish its object, mainly, by means of a permanent Library and by a the ensueing year: President, J. the resolution of Mr. two propositions in the resolution of Mr., Clark. First, that the doctrines of the Helper book are insurrectionary and hostile to the peace of the country. Was this not true to the letter? He asked the question. The next, was that no member of the House who endorsed or recommended the doctrines and sentiments therein affirmed, was fit to be Speaker of

MORE RELIFF FOR THE LAWRENCE this House. Was this not also true to the letter? He wanted an answer.

Mr. Bingham, of Ohio, wished only to say to the gentleman, the House and the country, that the gentleman from Virginia denounces that book, without limitation, as an incendiary production. He denounces the last will and testament of Washington, which is contained in that book. The resolution denounces the unanimous declarations of the Convention of Virginia of 1784, instructing the Congress at Philadelphia in that year. The resolution denounces all the truthful words of the distinguished Virginian, McDonnell, namely. You yoke your slave to labor as an ox, you may compel him to live to work, and work to live. and yet the idea that he was created free will abide with him, because he has the right to the hope of immortality. The resolution denounces the living sentiment of Jefferson, copied from his notes on Virginia, namely: "I tremble for my country when I reflect that God is that they are the proposed from the country when I reflect that the grant was the country when I reflect that the grant was the country with the tasks against the country when I reflect that the grant was the country when I reflect that the grant was the country when I reflect that the grant was the country when I reflect that the grant was the country when I reflect that the grant was the country when I reflect that the grant was the country when I reflect that the grant was the country when I reflect that the grant was the country when I reflect that the grant was the country when I reflect that the grant was the country when I reflect that the grant was the country when I reflect that the grant was the country when I reflect that the grant was just, and has no attribute to take sides against;
