The Other Side.

In yesterday's issue we published a state-mant relative to a difficulty between J. Charles Dicken, a young attorney of this city, and a certain Mad. Austin, which the gentleman referred to says is not only false, but injurious to him. We had an interview with him yesterday, when he gave his version of the affair, substantially as follows: He states that his acquaintance with Mad. A. does not date back more than six months, when he made her acquaintance through some administration busi-ness of, which he had the sattlement. During this time he has been her attorney, but denies ady improper intercourse. On Wednesday morning last, as Mr. D. states, Mad. A. called at his office, and, making a statement well cal-culated to bring the money, demanded $50 of him, which he refused, threatening to kick her out if she did not leave immediately, which she did. In the afternoon, watching her opportunity, Mad. A. entered his office while Mrs. D. and two other ladies were present. Mr. D. motioned her to a seat, where she remajned until the two ladies had left the office, leaving Mrz Dicken and wife. Mr. D. said to his wife, "This is the woman who was in the coal and lime office of T. McClury, corner of Anderson street and the Canal. here this morning," (having told her of the first visit) and then asked Mad. A. if she wished to see him. She replied that she wished to see him alone, but this Mr. D. refused to grant ted, and its contents, consisting of some soap, two chests of tea, a quantity of plaster, lime, and Mrs. D. also said she wished to hear anything Mad. A. had to say. The latter remained some half an hour, during which time Mr. D., having an idea that she wished to levy hr. D. requested Mad. A. to leave, which the Mr. D. requested Mad. A. to leave, which the ony discrete the state of the state of the state only eliciting the reply, "'s good friend." The hour for; closing the office having srrived, Mr. D. requested Mad. A. to leave, which she was not disposed to do. So he stepped to the door and requested a boy passing through the hall to go to Alderman McBride's office for a which he did. In the meantime Mr D. had returned to the office and the Madame, divining his errand outside, saized an ink-
