THURSDAY MORNING, MARCH 7.
BLOCKADE OF THE SOUTHERN PORTS.

IMPORTANT NOTIFICATION OF THE ENGLISH AND FRENCH GOVERNMENTS.

WASHINGTON, March 4, 1861.—I learn that Lord Lyons, the British Minister here, has just notified the American government that Great Britain will not recognize a blockade of the Southern ports, unless it is a blockade of the whole of the coast, in accordance with the Treaty of Paris, which will not be recognized.

It is understood that it is the intention of Mr. Lincoln to give the sanction to the government in relation to France, and that all the European Powers, in consequence of the peculiar relations they have with the commerce of the South, will likewise take advantage of the Treaty of Paris and act in accordance with the policy adopted by the French and English governments.

It is very correctly inferred from the above announcement, that it is very probable that neither France nor England will permit a blockade of the cotton States, and that it is highly probable they already have an understanding on the question, as they had in the case of the interruption of the trade in China.

It is believed that the British and French governments were originally founded to defend the rights of the Southern States, and that the President's attempt to carry out the policy announced in his inaugural address, will have the effect of bringing England and France into the ranks of the Southern States.
