Visit of General Cameron to the Pennsylvahia Volunteers, at the Capitol Building.

WASHINGTON, April 19, 1861. This afternoon the Secretary of War visited the Capitol Building in this city. He was received with great enthusiasm, and his addresses to the different companies produced an electrical effect. He called first upon the Ringold Light Artillerists, from Reading, Berks county, commanded by Captain James McKnight There he was received with great cordiality by officers and men, after which, he was presented formally to the two companies from Pottsville, numbering each over one hundred, and the company from Allentown and that from Lewistown. He addressed them as fol-

GENTLEMEN: I have deemed it my duty to vicit you, for the purpose of extending to you a hearty greeting to the National Capitol. I am more than rejoiced that the first volunteers outside of this District should have come from my native State of dear old Pennsylvania. am glad to see many faces recalling old recollections in your ranks; so many young and able bodied men; and so many belonging to the party which did not contribute to the election of the present Administration. But, my friends, this is a question no longer of party but of country. The Administration has attacked nobody, and yet I believe your most energetic efforts will shortly be required to de-fend the flag of the country from being again assailed by those who attacked it at Fort Sumter. "And now gentlemen, I cannot, of course, discriminate in the treatment I shall extend to the regulars and volunteers called here for the pay every attention to the volunteers of Penn. ylvania-and this not alone because they come from that State, but because they were the first who were fortunate enough to reach Washington to repel the enemies of the
