ed in Maryland, has been hailed with that sort of qualified satisfaction which every community that is placed under military super-vision is apt to feel when it knows that the general in command has the instincts of a gen-tleman. But it would be wrong to suppose change whatever in relation to the nature of the indignity which has been put upon this city and State by quartering Northern troops in our midst, or that, when the time comes, it will fail to manifest in a way which cannot be misunderstood. We warn General Cadwalader not to mistake the respect which is paid to his reputation for humanity, and to his fine social qualities, for an acknowledgement that it was not the armed occupation of Maryland which was opposed by her people, but the instruments employed to carry out the measure. He could not fall into a more grievous error. We may admire the character of the newly appointed jailor, and may believe that, unde his rule, our manacles will not be permitted to cut quite so deeply into the flesh as they might under the orders of another; but we know nevertheless, that we are manacled; that we shall be rective until we are free, and that we shall never cease to demand to be reinstated in tyranically dispossessed, and to which we are legally entitled; and we say to General Cadwalader, and we say also to the Administration under whose orders he is acting—that we will have them. In speaking thus firmly, but We are simply standing up in the defence of the sovereignty of the State, and of the privileges of the people under the laws. As a private gentleman, we entertain a very high respect for General Cadwalader, but as a military officer, appointed to carry out the meass ures of the Administration, he has no more business to exercise authority over us than had General Butler, nor does it matter one jot whether his command consists of militia from Massachusetts or militia from Pennsylvania the prevalent feeling which their presence en-genders among us is one of deep, intense, suppressed indignation.
