VOLUME XIX. PITTSBURGH, SATURDAY MORNING, JUNE 1, 1861. NUMBER 231.

STEER N. W.

THE FIRST OFFICER'S STORY.

About two years ago I left the service.—I was tired of it; and as I wanted some more exciting employment, I joined a whaler. We were unlucky—somehow I bring no luck anywhere—and were nearly empty. We were cruising up here to the North, and thinking of making for home, as the weather had changed, and the ice forms precious quick in those latitudes when it once begins. The captain naturally wanted to hang on to the last for the chance of another haul.

One bright afternoon, just after eight bells, I made up the log and took it to the captain's cabin. I knocked at the door, and as nobody answered I walked in. I thought it odd the captain had'nt answered me, for there he was sitting at his desk, with his back to me, writing. Seeing he was employed, I told him I had brought the log, laid it down on the table beside him, and, as he made no answer, I walked out. I went on deck, and the first person I met was the captain. I was puzzled—I could not make out how he got there before me.

"How did you get up here?" I said.

"I just left you writing in your cabin."

"I have not been in my cabin for the last half hour," the captain answered; but I thought he was chafing and did'nt like it.

"There was some one writing at your desk just now," I said; "if it wasn't you you had better go and see who it was."

The log is made up. I have left it in your cabin sir," and with that I walked sulkily away. I had no idea of being chaffed by the captain, to whom I had taken a dislike.

"Mr. Brown," said the captain, who saw I was nettled, "you must have been mistaken, my desk is locked. But come—we'll go down and see about it."

I followed the captain into the cabin.—The log was on the table, the desk was closed, and the cabin was empty. The captain tried the desk—it was locked.

"You see, Mr. Brown," he said, laughing "you must have been mistaken, the desk is locked."

I was postive.

"Somebody may have picked the lock," I said.

"But they couldn't have closed it again," the captain suggested; "but to satisfy you, I will open it and see if the contents are safe, though there is not much here to tempt a thief."

He opened the desk and there—stretched right across it—was a sheet of paper, with the words "Steer N. W." written in an odd cramped hand.

The captain looked at the paper, and then handed it to me.

"You are right Mr. Brown; somebody has been here. This is some hoax."

We sat there some time talking, and trying to guess what could be the subject of such a joke, if joke it was meant to be.—I tried to identify the back of the man I had seen at the desk with that of any of the crew. I could not do it. It is true I had at first taken the man for the captain, but now points of difference suggested themselves. I had not looked very attentively at the figure, but still I was under the impression that the coat it had on was brown, and the hair which appeared under the cap, seemed, as I remembered, to have been longer and whiter than the captain's. There was only one man on board who resembled in the least the figure I had seen. I suggested to the captain that it might have been old Shiel the boatswain. He did not like to suspect the old man, who was a great favorite; besides, what motive could he, or indeed any one else, have had in trying to change the course of the vessel?

Not to appear to suspect any one in particular, the captain determined to have up all the crew.

We had them up one by one. We examined them, and made all those who could write, write "Steer N. W.," but we gained no clue. One thing was very clear—it could not have been old Shiel, who was proved to have been forward at the time I was in the captain's cabin. The mystery remained unsolved.

That evening I sat drinking my grog with the captain in his cabin. We were neither of us inclined to be talkative. I tried to think of home, and the pleasure it would be to see old England again, but still my thoughts always wandered back to that mysterious writing. I tried to read, but I caught myself furtively peeping at the desk, expecting to see the figure sitting there.

The captain had not spoken for some time, and was sitting with his face buried in his hands. At last he suddenly looked up and said:

"Suppose we alter her course to northwest, Mr. Brown?"

"I don't know what it was; I cannot hope to make you understand the feeling in my mind that followed those words; it was a sense of relief from a horrible nightmare. I was ashamed of the childish pleasure I felt, but I could not help answering eagerly, "Certainly; shall I give the order?"

I waited no longer, but hurried on deck and altered the course of the vessel.

It was a clear frosty night, and as S. looked at the compass before going below, I felt strangely please, and caught myself chuckling and rubbing my hands—at what, I cannot say—I didn't know then, but a great weight had been taken off my mind.

I went down to the cabin, and found the captain pacing up and down the small space. He stopped as I came in, and looking, said abruptly—

"It can do no harm, Mr. Brown."

"If this breeze continues," I answered, "we can hold on for thirty hours or so, but then, I should think——"

"But then—we shall find ice. Howe's the wind?"

"Steady, north by east."

We sat down and finished our grog. I had, the morning watch to keep next day. I was too restless to sleep after it, so I kept on deck the whole of the day. Even that did not satisfy me. I was continually running into the tops with my glass, but every time I came down disappointed. The captain was as unquiet as myself. Something was we expected to happen, but what it was to be we could form no idea. The second officer, I believe, thought us both crazy; indeed, I often wondered, myself, at the state I was in. Evening came, and nothing had turned up. The night was bright, and the captain determined to carry on under easy sail till morning.

Morning came, and with the first grey light I was on deck. It was bitter cold. Those only who have seen them can form an idea of the delicate tints of the morning sky in those northern seas. But I was in no humor to appreciate the beauties of nature. There was a mist low down on the horizon. I waited patiently for it to lift. It lifted soon, and I could not be mistaken—beyond it I could see the shimmer of ice. I sent down to tell the captain, who came on deck directly.

"It is no use, Mr. Brown," he said; "you must put her about.

"Wait one moment" I said, "the mist is lifting more; it will be quite clear directly."

The mist was indeed lifting rapidly. Far to the north and west we could see the ice stretching away in an unbroken field. I was trying to see whether any break appeared in the ice towards the west, when the captain, seizing my arm with one hand, and pointing straight ahead with the other, exclaimed:

"My God! there is a ship there."

The mist had risen like a curtain, and there sure enough, about three miles ahead was a ship seemingly firmly-packed in the ice. We looked at it in silence. There was some meaning, after all, in that mysterious warning, was the first thought that suggested itself to me. She's nipped bad, sir," said old Shiel, who with the rest of the crew, was anxiously watching our new discovery. I was trying to make her out with the glass, when the flash of a gun, quickly followed by the report, proved that she had seen us. Up went the flag Union downwards We needed no signal to know her distress. The captain ordered the second officer off in the boat. I watched him as he made his way over the ice with a few of the men toward the ship. They soon returned with eight of the ship's crew. It was a dismal account they gave of their situation. They might have sawed their way out of the ice, but the ship was so injured that she could not have floated an hour. The largest of their boats was stove; the others were hardly seaworthy. They were preparing, however, to take to them as a last resource, when our welcome arrival put an end to their fears. Another detachment was soon brought off and the captain with the remainder of the crew was to follow immediately.

I went to my cabin, and tried to think over the singular fate which had made us the preservers of this ship's crew. I could not divest myself of the idea that some supernatural agency was connected with that paper in the desk, and I trembled at the thought of what might have been the consequences if we had neglected the warning. The boat coming alongside interrupted my reverie. In a few seconds I was on deck.

I found the captain talking to a fine old sailor-like looking man, whom he introduced to me as Captain Squires. Captain Squires shook hands with me, and we remained talking some time. I could not keep my eyes off his face; I had a conviction that I had seen him somewhere, where I could not tell. Every now and then I seemed to catch at some clue, which vanished as soon as touched. At last he turned round to speak to some of his men. I could not be mistaken—there was the long white hair, the brown coat. He was the man I had seen writing in the captain's cabin!

That evening I and the captain told the story of the paper to Captain Squires, who gravely and in silence listened to our conjectures. He was too thankful for his escape out of such imminent peril to question the means by which it had been brought about. At the captain's request he wrote, "Steer N. W." We compared it with the original writing. There could be no doubt of it. It was in the same odd, cramped hand.

Can any one solve the mystery?

HARD TIMES OUTDONE.
6,000 Premiums Amounting to $100,000
WILL BE AWARDED
On the First Wednesday in August, 1861.

"THE RAPPAHANNOCK MANUFACTURING COMPANY" propose to raise, by the first Wednesday in August next, a CAPITAL STOCK, of $480,000; to be subscribed in shares of $20 each; $24,000 to be returned to the subscribers in the form of PREMIUMS, as an inducement to subscribers, and the balance, $360,000, to be applied to the erection, at the new village of Rappahannock, in Virginia, of a Southern Arms, a Clothing and Woolen Factory. The shares can be subscribed in weekly or monthly instalments of any amount to suit the convenience of the subscriber, and receipts will be sent from time to time for the amount paid in. Persons residing at a distance may send the small they may be, which may be done conveniently in postage stamps, gold coin, or current bank notes or drafts. If less than a share of $20 should be subscribed by the time specified, the money will not be taken, but applied to unity will be given to increase it by the commissioners thereafter, until enough is secured to make a full share of Stock. But if a share, or several shares should be subscribed before that time, the subscriber will receive a certificate of preferred Stock, bearing interest at the holder's per cent per annum on the par value thereof. All the Stockholders will, moreover, receive semi-annual dividends out of the net profits of the Company, so soon as their Factories are put in operation. Besides the above, the person who subscribes the largest amount, (by the first Wednesday in August, 1861,) will be entitled to a premium of $2,000; the next largest to $3,300; the next largest to $1,500; the two next largest to $1,000 each; the four next largest to $500 each; the ninety next largest to $50 each; the nine hundred next largest to $40 each; the three hundred next largest to $30 each; the one thousand next largest to $20 each; the three thousand four hundred next largest to $5 each, and the person who fails to obtain either of the above premiums, will be entitled to an extra premium of $1,000, which will be paid in Gold, Real Estate, Arms, Military or other Clothing. Thus, the largest sum, which may not exceed $9 21, will take the largest premium of $6,000; and the smallest sum entitled (if not less than $4 70, will secure a premium of $1,000 These shares are all founded upon Real Estate, which is pledged for the security or redemption of the Stock, and any shareholder, wishing to sell any time exchange his stock for any of the Company's lands at their lowest market value and receive a good and sufficient warranty title.

23. A few Agents well recommended, will be employed at liberal rates, both to obtain subscriptions to the Stock of the Company and to sell shares to purchasers. Apply for further information to the Secretary, at the office, 45, address, with a stamp enclosed, the Treasurer.

E. BAUDER, Port Royal, Virginia.

REFERENCES.—Editors and Publishers of Newspapers generally in the various States, nearly all of whom already hold deeds from us in the Real Estate alluded to.

The Portsmouth (Va.) Daily Transcript says: "This project is one well worth the attention of our people, and we assure them that the parties representing it are reliable and responsible. Besides, those who are advised of the progress of the plan say it is in the fullest degree of prospective success."

The Independence (Va.) News says: "It is really a paying enterprise. The town is already begun. Nothing can be lost in any event."

The Elyton Central Alabamian says: "Scattering in documents are held out to those who desire to take risks, and from some business transactions we have had with the getters up of the enterprise, we can commend them as reliable."

The Danville (Pa.) Herald says: "Here is an opportunity excelling anything we know of, both in character and terms. People of prescribed means can have a trial with a hopes of satisfactory results."

The Pittsburg Iron City says: "We have the names of numerous persons who now hold land in that locality sold by Mr. Bauder. We would be pleased to exhibit the testimonials in our possession to any one wishing to enquire."

THE WONDER OF THE AGE.

DR. J. S. ROSE'S PAIN CURER.

IT CURES ALL PAIN AND ALL disease in the bud. This truly admirable and efficacious remedy is no quack medicine, but is the result of thirteen years of hard study and experimenting. The ingredients are the products of Spain, and were discovered by the author of this medicine on a visit to that country.

has used it with almost miraculous effect in private practice, till at last he was induced by the solicitation of friends to give it to the public.

It is used according to the directions of it not only relieves all pain, but cures it usually on the first application. It may be relied upon for curing and giving almost instantaneous relief (as thousands who have used it can testify) to Rheumatism, Ague, Sudden Colds, Cholera Infantum
