Sound Doctrine.

We regret to be informed that our City Treasurer, acting under what we think mistaken counsel, declines to pay the July interest on our city loans held by parties in the rebel States, or by persons supposed to lack in loyalty to the Government and the Union. Aside from the immorality and illegality of such conduct to the City Treasurer, it is most inexpedient and unwise. It is giving us the bad eminence already acquired by the rebel States of the South, which have not only exhausted their power in plundering the Government but through State action are endeavoring to rob their northern creditors, thus violating faith, honor and common honesty. Let them alone have all of money or fame that may be earned in that way. The North does not owe to the South enough to make it an object with any honest creditor among us, to think of competing with them in conduct so villainously disreputable and would not were the amount a thousand times greater than what it is. Our authorities ought to see that our business men who have given credit to the South have information of any property or money of their debtors within reach of the laws of this Commonwealth, that the same may be attached and levied on for the payment of debts justly due, and we would even strain a point under the aggravated circumstances of the case, to put such Southern property here into the hands of their creditors, but under no circumstances, commit the wrong which we so universally denounce. Besides being illegal and demoralizing, it is most unquestionably bad in its effect. The whole North now, more than ever before, requires credit, and it should be the pride of Philadelphia and all loyal citizens to make the contrast on this subject between the North and the South as broad and marked as possible. A few months ago some proposition of this character was started as between the New York banks and their creditors in the rebelling States, but the better appreciation of credit by the banks and merchants in that city, soon prevailed in discarding the whole thing. New York would have no part in so discreditable a policy, and it is sincerely hoped Philadelphia will not take up the dishonesty repudiated by that city, and risk her reputation for integrity for so trifling an amount as may be due in interest to creditors residing in the South. Let us fulfil all our obligations to everybody, that we may the more consistently and determinedly enforce loyalty and respect for government and law on all who may place themselves in rebellion.—Phil. Ledger.

The Special Reporter

The Washington special reporter for a New York daily is an animal sui generis. Inasmuch as all the news proper is forwarded by the agents of the Associated Press, it is his business to pick up all the gossip, absorb all the rumors, and be very knowing in all military and Cabinet secrets. Personally he varies very much. Now he is gray haired but lithe and active, looking profoundly wise and important. Again he is rough and brusque, thick set, sandy haired and generally bull doggy in aspect. And this man is your true sensation reporter. It is he who gets up attacks by Beauregard on Washington. Still again, the reporter may be an eminently nice young man, given to kid gloves and odorous of perfumes. One such as this, not long ago, began a dispatch to the Tribune with the solemn announcement, "These are grand and awful times." Mr. Dana replied by letter that the fact stated was already known in New York, and it was hardly worth while to pay telegraph charges upon it. The reporter was indignant, showed Dana's letter to his friends, considered it insulting, and was meditating the propriety of resigning, when the matter was cut short by Mr. Dana's resigning him. Not to put too fine a point upon it, he was discharged.

The reporter is always familiar with cabinet secrets. He picks them up in bar rooms, imbibing them with his oft-repeated cocktail. It may be that owing to the mixture of drink and State affairs his imagiction is sometimes overstimulated and reports are sent on, out of which nothing but the lightning could burn the flavor of Washington whiskey. And then, too, it sometimes happens along towards midnight, that when the wits begin to grow hazy, that department clerks are wicked enough to "sell" the reporter. You will see the clerk ask the news-man to drink. The news-man never refuses, and then a conversation in the corner follows the clerk emphatic and solemn, the reporter confiding and credulous. Next morning the New York daily prints the pith of that conversation, and the next night the wicked department clerk reads it with an inward chuckle at the success of the "sell."

Such are some of the means by which the special dispatches of the press are made up. If not very reliable they are at least very amusing to those who have watched the process of their manufacture. They should be regarded as a practical joke, carried on at an unlimited expense.

"WHAT ARE WE FIGHTING FOR.—The N. Y. Times says, in answer to this question: "Most people have found out what we are fighting for—those who have not may settle down into the belief that it is to enable lawyer's clerks to draw the pay of Colonels and Brigadier Generals. The conclusion would not be wholly correct, neither would it be wholly wrong.

Gen. McClellan.

A letter writer thus describes the personal appearance of Gen. McClellan: Gen. McClellan is a gentleman of a well-knit and fully-rounded person—His brow bears the impress of genius and intellect, and his general expression is quick, sharp and penetrating. He has a determined rather than a dignified air, which commands respect; and though rather young looking for his nature military reputation, will doubtless give a good account of himself in the coming struggle.

AN IMPORTANT ORDINANCE.—The Old Virginia State Convention has passed the following ordinance—yeas, 58; nays, 27:

Be it Ordained, That the payment of the interest upon the bonds of the State now the property of the United States, or held by or in trust, or which are now the property of a citizen or corporation of said government, or of any State adhering thereto, shall be suspended during the existing war; and for the purpose of ascertaining the bonds so owned, the commissioners of the sinking fund shall cause such interrogations as they may prescribe to be answered under oath. The interest on said bonds, except those held as aforesaid, and the sterling bonds payable in London, shall be paid in at the treasury, and not elsewhere, in currency.

We learn that on Thursday last two of the dead bodies of Lincoln's men were found in the woods, in the neighborhood of the Bethel battle ground in a state of decomposition. They were traced out by means of the buzzards hovering over the spot. One of the corpses had in his haversack a quarter of a baked shoat. It is supposed they had crawled away from the scene of battle after being wounded, and died on the spot on which they were discovered. From their uniforms it is supposed they were members of a Zouave regment. It is said that all along the road from Bethel to Hampton a most intolerable stench prevails and that, from the appearance of the buzzards circling round about, there must be numbers of putrifying carcasses in the woods.

DURING the revolutionary war, Gen. Lafayette being in Baltimore, was invited to a ball. He went, but instead of joining in the amusement, as might have been expected of a young Frenchman of twenty-two, he addressed the ladies thus: "Ladies, you are very handsome; you dance very prettily; your ball is very fine—but my soldiers have no shirts!" This was irresistible. The ball ceased, the ladies went home and went to work, and the next day a large number of shirts were ready for the gallant defenders of their country.
