The County Treasury Frauds—Hearing Under 1 From 1

Mr. Alex. Bell, one of the parties against whom the Prothonatory, Mr. Arms strong, to whom is due the credit of exposing the late frauds on the County Trea. siry, made information for conspiracy to defraud, alleging that his connection with the frauds was innocent, demanded a hearing, which was given him by Mayor Wilson yesterday afternoon. Thos. M. Marshall, Eq., appeared for the prosecution, but produced no evidence, stating that, if necessary, Mr. Armstrong would testify

Com. of Penn'a, Charge, Conspiracy. M. W. Lewis, et al. The moment I heard my name in connection with the above charge, knowing combination with either or all of the defendants named, to do any act, illegal, fraudulent or otherwise, I felt a keen anxiety as innocent of any intentional act of fraud as the child yet unborn. I did not combine, agree or conspire with any of the defondants to do or perform any act. If any companies. fraud has been perpetrated, I have no knowledge of it and have not realized any benefit therefrom, or proceeds thereout. Along in the year 1860—I have no means of fixing the time, as I did not charge my memory with it-being in the office of the county jail, John Small and others, I think, being present, when M. W. Lewis, at that time a clerk in the office of the Prothonatory, came in and said, addressing Mr. Small, in substance, "I want you to go to the Treasurer and draw some jury fees-I don't want to go, having to go so often." Small was engaged at something, perhaps reading, and on looking up, replid: "There's Alex. Bell, he is doing nothing; he will go." I went, of course, drew some money, whatever the order or certifiwalk and handed it to him; he thanked me and we separated. I thought nothing of it and cannot of my own knowledge, drawn upon nor the sum drawn. On one other eccasion I met said Lewis on the steps, going up to the Court House; he asked me to do a similar act, alleging at Small since soon after his appointment as the Union. jailor, consequently, was more or less about have met with M. ALEX. BELL. Mr. Coyle asked that Mr. Bell be discharged, to which Mr. Marshall, though expressing his belief in the innocent cheracter of Mr. Bell's complication, objected. He stated that there were in some instances, four offences combined, conspiracy, embezziement, forgery and perjury. It was clear that Mr. Bell had obtained pos-

Accidents from this source are continually occurring, thus giving re-peated warnings, but their frequency ap-pears to be by no means diminished. A fountain stream of oil had just been struck, and the fires in the furnaces were immediately extinguished, but by some mishap a spark caught to the flowing well, and everything around it was de-

They would not wait for other committees to make their reports, as they hoped to complete their business so that the House

The importance of having disciplined troops, was so obvious as not to require any argument. If the army should be too large after the rebellion i suppressed, it would be easy to reduce it. The bill proposed a war standard. Mr. Hickman said: I am for the largest num. ber of men. If the rebellion in the Southern States requires twice 500,000 men I am for employing them and the eighteen loyal Northern States will do the same thing.
