THE DAILY POST

FRIDAY MORNING.....JULY 19.

A Literal "Marriage of Convenience."

The "Observateur Belge" tells the following capital story, which if not new is still old enough to bear reviving, especially at a season when office seekers are so put to their mettle that no hint of methods can be thrown away:

"The grandfather of the present King of Holland one day received a visit from a young man who requested to be appointed as successor to a notary deceased on the previous day. The King said: 'The notary has left nothing for his widow with the exception of some half dozen children to bring up; the person who succeeds to the office must do something for her.' 'There was a candidate here some minutes before you came who offered her a pension of four hundred francs a year, which is very little.' 'I will give her four hundred florins, sir.' 'Well we shall see. Come again in a week.' The young man was punctual to his appointment. 'It appears,' said the king, 'that the connection is a good one; your competitor now promises to give the widow five hundred florins a year.' 'Well, sire, I will give six hundred florins.' 'Come again in a week; he who makes the most liberal offer shall have the office.' At the third audience the other competitor had advanced to eight hundred florins, but our young man declared that such generosity would be ruinous, and that he could not offer so much. 'I venture, however, to ask your Majesty to grant me the favor of suspending your decision for a week longer.'

"The delay was granted, but when the young man came for the fourth time, his Majesty could not help saying, with some impatience: 'It is useless, sir, to say anything more. Your rival has not hesitated to offer a pension of a thousand florins; will you do as much for the widow?' 'I beg your pardon, sire, I will do more; I am about to marry her. Here is her written consent.' King William was so much diverted with this place-hunting expedient that he determined the Queen should immediately share his amusement, and the hero of the adventure accordingly had the honor of relating all the particulars to their majesties, who laughed most heartily at the story. This model place-hunter afterwards became an exceedingly successful man in his business."

Why a Rebel Newspaper Was Suppressed.

Colonel Neil, commander of the federal reserve corps at St Louis, has issued a proclamation, giving his reasons for suppressing the Missouri State Journal, a violent secessionist paper. He says:

"Its recent course has been such as to satisfy any candid mind, beyond the possibility of a doubt, that its whole aim and purpose has been, and is, by fraud, by deception, by the fabrication of false intelligence, by its open communication with those confessedly engaged in this rebellion, by its publication of such correspondence inducing the weak to believe in the safe and successful accomplishment of treasonable acts and designs, and by its skillfully contrived and inflammatory appeals to passion and prejudice, to secure the entire subversion of federal authority, within the state of Missouri, to incite the people thereof to armed opposition to its officers and soldiers acting under the orders of the Government, to encourage them to the commission of acts of violence and oppression against loyal citizens, and to a rebellious and treasonable resistance to the enforcement of the laws of the United States within the limits of this state.

"For these reasons, and to the end that the aid and comfort so rendered to the enemies of the government may be withheld, and the public peace promoted, I have, by order of General Lyon, commanding the forces of the United States in Missouri, suppressed the publication of the Missouri State Journal for the present.

"Its further publication will be prohibited as long as the public peace and safety may require it."

A Breakdown of the Southern Confederacy Declared Inevitable.

The Knoxville (Tenn.) Whig says:—The thinking people of the South are seriously pondering over the sad condition of the country. The question is, what is to become of the country? A military spirit has been aroused, and unless it is speedily quelled it will fasten a despotism upon the necks of the people. This is now the case in Tennessee. Before these secession leaders are aware of it, the people will have discovered the chains forged for them, and they will sweep their corrupt leaders away by the storm which they have raised.

"Already, no less than a half-dozen leaders are intriguing for the prospective dictatorship of the Southern Confederacy. These are Yancey, Wise, Toombs, Rhett, Davis, Gov. Brown, of Georgia, and Gov. Harris, of Tennessee. Personal rivalry among these men may prevent either of them from grasping the coveted prize, but some other ambitious men will try to seize the reins of power, and assume the kingly control of the Southern States.

"Some of these Southern aspirants are reported to have said, time and again, that a republican form of government is at an end; that there is too much freedom in the country, and that the people triumph in too many elections; and that a new form of government will have to be established.

"This is unfortunately too true, so far as the South is concerned. Popular government in the South has degenerated into a most detestable form of anarchy. The population has become duped and debased; the political leaders have become selfish and corrupt. A total breakdown, therefore, of this new confederate form of government is inevitable. A military despotism, supported by an immense standing army, now looms up before the anxious gaze of the speculators, tyrants, capitalists, and bad men of the South."

The Cotton Loan.

The "Confederate Cotton Loan" is causing the leaders of Southern insurrection some trouble. All those charming stories we have heard about the self-denial and patriotic devotion of the Southern cotton planters seem to be apocryphal. The planters love the South well, but they love the cotton better. Patriotism is a cheap commodity, "if it is the last refuge of a scoundrel." It is a nice thing to write about, sing about, and make speeches about—a splendid theory, and a pleasing and most economical idea. But cotton is something more. It is a substance, and a valuable substance. It brings money and feeds field-hands, neither of which patriotism can do. We cannot live on patriotism, nor support large plantations, nor keep a profitable lot of field hands. Accordingly, those who have cotton prefer to hold it for a market, instead of placing it in the custody of men of questionable character, at an uncertain credit.

Coffee.

The great coffee-producing country of the world is Brazil, where its cultivation was not even commenced until 1774, and where, even in 1808, the annual crop did not exceed 8,000,000 pounds. But its growth there has increased with a rapidity only equaled by the increase of the cotton crop in our country, and its present annual production is about 400,000,000 pounds. The following is one of the latest estimates of the total production of the world:

Brazil	400,000,000 lbs.
