vania were a united people, sustaining the government against this rebellion, without regard to former party ties and proclivities. The election of a pure Republican ticket would have precisely the effect which the GAZETTE fears. It would be an emphatic declaration that the people were divided and refused to coalesce in a united support of the government.

The GAZETTE'S arguments against Union ticket are up-hill work. The people have decided for a Union ticket, on principle, and they will have it. The same arguments which the GAZETTE uses against placing Democrats in positions, as Union men, might with equal truth be used against trusting any part of the fighting of this war in the hands of the tens of thousands of Democrats who were first to respond to the call of their country when this rebellion broke out, and have been ever since rushing to the field.

The two hundred and thirty thousand Democratic electors of this State are for the Union, and in the field or the forum, in the Legislature or any other office of trust or responsibility, will maintain the cause of their country. Why should the editors of the GAZETTE desire to ostracise them? When the election comes it will be found that the people of this county will endorse the principle of Union by a triumphant election of the Union ticket.
