AN ELECTION ON PRINCIPLE. It is a source of great gratification to all good citizens to observe that the people are so unanimous in their determination to and not from party predilictions. The sentiment that an endorsement of the govcan only be done by disregarding strength, party nominations, and electing a Union ticket. The only opposition to such an endorsement of the Administration comes from a few whose desire for office is greater than their patriotism. But the people are patricities. A childish undervaluing of the enemy is the capital blunder which we have making from the beginning, but a blunder which we ought to be in no danger of re peating since the 21st of July. At first, we obstinately refused to believe in the poserty of those who are known to be in arms against the Union. This interprewould have no associates; when facts falsi. question as to how they shall be fied this conclusion, we were ready to demonstrate that Louisiana would never cut off her connection with the magnificent valley of the Mississippi, by whose trade she was enriched; when Louisians had joined the rebels, we proved, by conclusive arguments that the rebellion would never extend beyand the cotton states. After Samter had allen, Virginia had secoded, and the confederate army had rendezvoused in that state, and menaced Washington, we insistd on helieving that the rebels would never ght, and raised the cry of "Forward to chmond," in the self-complicent expec tation that they would re reat in terror be-fore our advance. We have gulped down absurd stories about the great numbers of rebels killed during the siegh of Samter about the death of Beauregard, about the death of Jeff, Davis, and seem ready to give easy credence to every fugitive account which reaches us of the demoralization of the robel army. This turn of thought which leads us to devour everything that is said in disparagement of the strength of the enemy seems to be regarded by many as ratriotic, and it no doubt proceeds fro
