PRESIDENT LINCOLN. Almost everything we see and hear of the President of the United States, show him to be a man of singular simplicity and goodness of heart. Such a man has no business in being at the head of public affairs in times like the present: the . condition of our things requires a Louis Napoleon, or some one like him, possessing immense brains and no sympathy. The time is out of joint, requiring a maslate on its results.

terspirit to measure and make it whole Of the millions who voted against Abraham Lincoln last November, we question very much whether there is one who regrets his election more than he does himself. Being of great simplicity, frank and confiding, and used to and contented with the simple and quiet customs of rural life, how distasteful unde must be to him his situation now, of that grade. hommed in, as he is, by the craft and intrigue by which he is surfounded. Mr. Lincoln's speeches, immediately after his election, demonstrate how innocent he then was, of the condition of our country; he had no idea whatever of the awful crisis before him. He talked hopefully and predicted a speedy restoration of harmony between our now contending sections. In his inaugural address, too, he appealed to the rebels with all the affection of a father and hoped back to their allegiance. In his conduct as President, he reminds us of Henry the Sixth. of England, who, during the heavy times of bloody conflict between the houses of York and Lancaster, spent most of his time in mourning over a son who in battle had been slam by a father, by kindness and moderation to win them or over a father who had been slain by an unknown son. Indeed, in some respects, this horrible conflict of ours resembles that of the resentful roses which for forty years refused to grow and blossom together. We are not, of course, C? engaged in asserting rival claims to a crown and kingdom, but like the English war alluded to, we have, in ours, fathers and brothers contending on either side. President Lincoln knows and feels this more sensibly, perhaps, than any one else. He is a Southerner himself, by birth, while his inclinations are with admitted to be killed, and the rebels the North. Here there is a divided

Jo seph Holt, of Kentucky; and Hugh Campbell, of St. Louis, to examine and report upon all unsettled elaims against the Milli tary Department of the West which may have originated prior to the appointment of the present general, at which time the order was issued that all money must be disbursed by the regularly appointed agents of the government. FALSE REPORTS. Under the caption of "Truth the Best Policy," the Evening Post administers : sharp rebuke to our government fo.

sending out false reports of our forces' engagements with the rebels. It takes the late battle of Leesburg as an examole. The reason given, however, for holding the truth back in the instance alluded to, was that Secretary Seward did not want it to reach England by the teamer which sailed from New York he morning after the reception of the news of our disaster. But this does not satisfy the Evening Post, and so it uses its privilege of making complaint. "It was given out at first as a slight kirmish, in which we had suffered a brief repulse, which we afterwards retrieved by gaining a very decided advantage of position, Col.
