find a long report of it in the Toronto Globe of October 18. An cloquent leeture thus eloquently closed: Whatever direct advantage Canada or the empire might derive from the war, the people of Canada can never be indifferent to the dangers to the system of free intercourse and common arbite which is to stand or fall in this encoun ter. It is not by feeding our minds as have been sometimes appealed to. that we, the possessors of the seventh part of North America, are to shame ou republican neighbors out of their sus picions of ourselves Our littleness i not to rebuke their littleness; we are not to answer railing with railing; no to heap up wrath against the day of wrath. We can afford to speak of the American system, in this hour of its agony, in the glowing language of their finest poet: Sail os, O Union, strong and great. Humanity, with all os fears, With ait the hopes of fature years, Is hanging breathless in the face, We know what Master feel thy keel, What Workmen wrought try rits of steel, who made each mast, and is the and rope, What anyes rough, what barnings beat, to be the above to the result of the characteristics. in what a forge and what a neat. Were shaped the anchors of thy hope." We do not-to continue the poet's image-while the destined ship is driving on the rocks, her signal gun peal ing for aid above the din of the tempest, we do not lurk along the shore. gleating over her danger, in hope of enriching ourselves by the wreck. No. God forbid! Such is not the feeling of the people of Canada. On the contrary, so far as their public opinon can be heard throughout the British Empire, or the United States, their wish would be that the Republic, as it was twelve months ago, might live to celebrate in concord, in 1876, the centennary of its independence. We prefer our own institutions to theirs, but our preference is rational, not rancorous; we may think, and we do think, it would have been well for them to have retained more than they did retain of the long d more than they did retain of the long gold for sale by
