A CHAMPION DANCE BETWEEN TWO PADUCAH CONTRABANS. The following is an extract from private letter dated

· PADUCAH, Nov. 12. My flute is getting to be quite an institution in the camp, and, in the long STEEL CULTIVATOR TEETH evenings, I am very often called on by some squad or other to help them pass the time round their fire, or to furnish music for them to dance to by moonlight. We have quite a number of "centrabands" in camp—cooks officers servants, etc. Well, last night I got out the flute, and commenced playing, when presently one of them, a newlyarrived and perfectly green country darkey, stole up to the door of the tent to listen. A lot of the boys found him there and nothing would do them but he must dance. So I played up a lively tune, and he struck out,-and such dancing! I never saw the like. For a while an irregular shuffling of the legs and feet, without time or step; then suddenly falling on his knees; then sitting down, patting the ground with his hands, and butting it with his head; then rolling over on his back and scrambling up on his feet, and so on over again, getting more and more excited, until it seemed he never intended to stop. In the meantime Ander. son, another of our contrabands, had come up, and was perfectly horrified at such dancing, he couldn't rest satisfied until he had shown what he could do. So two or three of the boys jerked the first out of the ring, and Anderson commenced. He is really a fine dancer, and put in some beautiful steps which so excited the admiration and envy of the first that he couldn't be restrained from imitating them occassion ally, breaking into the ring in spite of the boys. They let him have his own way, and then followed such a scene as was never witnessed in a minstrel hall. His efforts to keep up with Anderson were so extravagant and ludiorous that the whole company was in a roar, and I had to stop playing and laugh with the rest. The darkeys were too excited, however, to notice this, and kept on dancing until "Greeney," in a wild attempt to execute some sort of a doubleshuffle, slipped and fell all in a heap, and was dragged out by the boys.
