UNION CONVENTION.

LL PERSONS FAVORABLE TO A Union Convention, for the purpose of selecting candidates for Major, Controller and City ipal election, will meet in their respective ward and precincts on SATURDAY NEXT, DECEMBER 21st, between the hours of 4 and 6 p. m. and celec fire delegates to be represented in a Convention to meet at the COURT HOUSE at 10 o'clock, on BY ORDER OF THE UNION COMMITTEE.

THE SPIRIT OF FACTION. Upon questions of hasty character, in which the honor or perpetuity of the fully equipped, and has just made her government was not involved, Mr. Clay, first trial trip successfully. She steamed we presume, was as daring, intrepid and ambitious leader as partizan conflicts in this country ever gave rise to. He was no fanatic, however-no patriot can be; but a statesman, bound in by no geographical boundaries, and whose heart bounded with hope as he contemplated the ultimate greatness of the Union. But even he, ten years ago, saw the growing danger of faction to the stability of our government. The discussions of the year 1850 developed a growing disunion party in several of the states South and an unyielding abolition faction, equally bent on mischief, in the North. Against these two extremes, Mr. Ciry and Mr. Webster, backed by all the great and liberal statesmen in despondency, Mr. Clay delivered one of tion, $50,075. his finest speeches, in which he rebuked the spirit of faction then contending for the mastery: in that address, to the Senate, the following sentence occurs: If I should venture to trace the cause of our present dangerous difficulties and distractions to its original source, I should ascribe it to the violence and intemperance of party spirit." Party spirit at the time when this speech was delivered, was quite moderate to what it has since become. Since then, anything like compromise has been rejected by the dominant party, and no spirit of accommodation manifested by those who only sought a pretext to rush into rebellion: faction has increased in intensity until it has produced, what Mr. Webster predicted it would, a distracted, beligerent and bleeding country Fanaticism on the one hand and resentment on the other, have produced, since ruption of the government. It may with great propriety be asked whether the generality of mankind are capable of rising above the influence of faction or party spirit? If we confine our observations to our own countrymen, at the present day, with all our boasted intelligence and pompous greatness, the facts seem to be against us. What do we behold even now? a party in Congress-supposed to be able to guide the nation in times of danger and commotion -pandering to the very spirit which has been chiefly instrumental in bringing upon us our present troubles, pandering by votes and speeches to a monster, the most dangerous, because of its being a mere conception, incapable of being turned to the slightest practical account. We are not considering this as a partizan, but simply to inquire whether we have reached that corrupt period in the lifetime of every popular government, when love of faction outgrows our love of country. The experience of every free government is that at certain periods they be come base and degenerate; faction takes the place of patriotism, and the best of citizens become the worst partizans and the most unyielding antagonists. The spirit of faction, therefore, is most dan. gerous, especially when it assumes to speak in the name of principle and patriotism. The vicious woo it, enamored of its prostitution; the demagogue pays homage to it by changing to suit its exactions; while the good are seduced to Corps, has been appointed to examine and report up-its embraces because of its outward sim. on the value of certain small arms and newly inventitude to patriotism and virtue. We are testing our power, which has not yet been limited but thinking men assume we are rapidly approaching it. We have an ultimatum, as a nation, as fixed and inexorabl as the individual whose training tempts him to exhibit the capacity of the human frame in lifting weights. We are approaching that crisis in more ways than one. We are about testing our as a sea-going ship and found perfectly strength as a nation united against out side pressure.
