THE DYING SOLDIER. BT OLIVER PERS MARLOVE.

It was an hour when the wind was sweeping Wildly over the battle plann, And the lightning from the clouds was leapfin And thuster had broken sho wanks of rain. That a wounded man at night was lying In pain upon the cold, wei ground, With no loved one to ase bim dying. Or hand to bind up his bleeding wound.

Bis country's fig he had made his pillow. And his neart was filled with its tree

And his heart was hive a the stars; And from the tide of his bosom's billow His blood had poured on its glowing bars. He had borne ut in the time of battle, With all the atrength of a patriot's pride; He had heard the lead-hall through is ristile, When comredes were failing on every side.

And as he lay in that hour, pale and gory, With the peeling thunder his dying duge, And the lighting farming sround is glory, Showing the sky like a burning surge, Be thought of home and a loving mother, Who proudly told him to bathe for right, And how had fallen a noble brother— And the liver of death grew lovely and bright

No more would he hear the rearing cannon, Nor bravely rush on the foeman's steri; No more would he wave aloit his pennor, For his heart had almos: ceased to feel; But a low, sweet prayer it still was breathing, Pure as the drares! low for the dead; And a jayous dream he had been wreathing Of the golden a reets where the angels tread
