

THE RIGHT VIEW.
The Secretary of State has written a letter in reply to one received by him from Smith O'Brien, the Irish patriot, from which we select the following passages, and in which we direct the attention of our readers:

"I am glad to hear that you are so anxious as to the progress of our disunion. It is a war which, I think, will be equal to what would result from a revival of ambition on the part of Europe. You view the dangers of war very differently from myself. While I believe war, waged without necessity and without motive, is not only a calamity, but a crime, I think also that the State which is just, equal and tolerant in its government, is the United States, by force of their political Constitution and their civil liberties, and must bear with it, unless it is forced upon it by a nation which is not only in the right, but whose defensive, we shall, while our rights are adequate to defend and maintain and preserve institutions, the substance of which could not increase the freedom of the happiness of one human being in the world, either in this generation or in any that are to come."

"I do, indeed, know that too many of our countrymen, heated by passion, feel and think differently, but for me, who have not only seen but felt, in every hour of my life, and in every condition of the human mind, the influence of such a political Constitution and such a country, without seeing a single act of injustice committed on any one, or suffering a single injury myself, there can be but one loyal wish—namely, that I may myself have lived a citizen of the unbroken American Union, and may leave to those who come after me, as we are to those who went before, all its honored institutions, unimpaired and inviolated."

"I have, I think, Mr. Seward may be committed, as the leader of a great party, to a power, are as disposed to overstate, because of its generally wise and conservative course he has pursued since he became the leading member of the Administration. Being unjustly a great man, he has today the opportunity, as well as the ability, to give for himself a name which will live after ages, second only to that of his father, the father of his country."

OUR AMERICAN CORRESPONDENCE.
SARATOGA, December 12, 1861.
February 12th, 1862.
Dear Post: Rain, rain, mud, mud—enough to give a fellow the required impudence to ask for a "week leave." I really pity the poor rheumatics, for they have an interesting old time of it, and still retain energy enough to arrive daily at Saratoga, when the same painful story is heard, in exchange for more colorful tales. The epidemic of rheumatism, I am sorry to say, has increased considerably. When I last wrote you, I think it was in a hospital and 25 in quarters. Now it shows 12 in hospital and 37 in quarters, including two line officers. But one death has occurred of late—private Wm. Irwin, Co. D. He was a young man highly esteemed by his comrades, and a brave and competent soldier. He was killed on Friday last, with the usual military ceremonies—See The Post.

Our military road to Liverpool Point is now completed, and pork and crackers are more plentifully served. The ruins of our old bake house have been removed, having been destroyed by fire, and our dreams are beautifully interlarded with visions of "soft bread" baked beans, &c. Company E (Friend Rifles) have arrived on picket duty, at Sandy Point, for the last ten days. They are in fine condition, and no wonder, for they landed several times daily on prime shell oysters, only four shilling per bushel, and crackers thrown in by the government.

There are arising a new and formidable battery on the hill at the mouth of Quantic Creek. Small ones of one gun, has just unmasked itself, opposite Mattawoman Creek, but in of little account, having but small range, the object clearly presenting itself that it is but a screen placed there to alarm the lower and more powerful batteries on the right and left banks of the river. Several vessels passed either up or down last night and the cannonading was brisk for upwards of an hour, but with the usual success, throwing the missiles of war upon our beach, where they are eagerly sought for by the curious, and sent off as specimens of art.

Night before last there was quite a young rebellion in the guard house. Liquor was clandestinely furnished them and was the source of numerous rows, gouged eyes, bites, &c. One of the participants arrived at the hospital yesterday, and presented a shocking appearance. One ear and a thumb being nearly bitten off, and both eyes in deep mourning. These murderers of the peaceful night were to be seen yesterday in various circumstances, viz: tied by the thumbs, gagged, barraged and scolded. The punishment, in some cases, was severe, but merited.

Our regiment, with the exception of the right and left companies, and their muskets yesterday. They are the Springfield, smooth bore, and not of great value. The two remaining companies, E and G, are supplied with the Minton rifle, and of course are envied. The regiment still continues to practice the bugle calls and bayonet exercises, and are progressing rapidly. The weather does not permit of battalion drill, and an occasional company drill and evening dress parade are all that is required of the men. So you can see we have plenty of time for other purposes.

Lieut. Joe Dannison is absent (at Pittsburgh) on furlough. Capt. J. M. Oakley, Co. A, leaves today, and will probably be in your city on Saturday next. He has attended to his onerous duties faithfully, and is fully deserving of a short leave of absence. He is one of our young and rising officers, and an honor to the city, which gave him birth. Remember that when he returns he will bring along the letter, so prepared by the ever welcome and readable Post. It has not been very punctual in its arrival of late. Please attend to this defect and cause no more disappointments.

Our theatrical troupe are rapidly completing the structure intended as a Hall, Chapel, &c., and intend appearing before our discriminating public in a short time. They have now under rehearsal "The Maid of Croisette" and "Teddies." Big limestones are anticipated. May they speedily arrive, for the monotony of camp life is becoming unbearable. Here I am again, three sheets in (not the wind), but the paper, and talking to remedy the matter, so arms a port-march. More anon.
Yours truly,
R. C. H.

The French Emperor on American Affairs.
(Correspondence of the London Post.)
Paris, Thursday, Jan. 31, 1862.
As stated a few days ago, the destruction of Charleston harbor created a great sensation here, and will, we believe, for full information on the subject, those journals that enjoyed the reputation of semi-official derived their and quoted largely from the "Whig" and "Whig-Tory" newspapers that have within the last few months shown themselves most antagonistic to the American Union. But it will doubtless be interesting to your readers to hear that the Emperor does not in any way condescend to comment on the subject, any more than does generally the public here. His Imperial Majesty, I can with it to great confidence assert, derives much of his information on American subjects from an American gentleman, with whom he is in the habit of conversing frequently on Transatlantic affairs, and who has lived for many years in Europe as to enable him to take a less prejudicial view of man, parties and political events in America than he could under any other circumstances. Yesterday, this gentleman had the honor to be summoned to the Tuilleries, where he was in the course of a long interview with the Emperor, interrogated with regard to the American situation, and the Emperor's father, an Irish scholar, who is in the habit of conversing frequently on Transatlantic affairs, and who has lived for many years in Europe as to enable him to take a less prejudicial view of man, parties and political events in America than he could under any other circumstances.

The Offer to the Archduke Maximilian Doomed.
(From the Vienna Correspondence Post.)
The Emperor's offer to the Archduke Maximilian, which was published in the "Pittsburgh Post" of the 10th inst., is being regarded in the most unfavorable light by the Emperor's advisers. It is believed that the Emperor's offer is a pure invention, and that the Emperor does not at this moment feel himself bound to accept it. Florence, Alabama.
Florence, Alabama, the town reached by our gunboats, on their excursion to the Tennessee river, is the county seat of Lauderdale county, Alabama. It is situated on the river, being immediately below the "muscle shoals." It was laid out in 1818, and is situated on an elevated plain, about forty miles from the river. The streets are one hundred feet wide and cross each other at right angles. A few years ago it contained three churches, a Episcopal and one Presbyterian, and two female academies. A weekly newspaper is published there. There are several cotton factories in the vicinity. The population in 1850 was 1,170. It is a town of great beauty, and is situated on the Tennessee river, several miles from the mouth of the river.
