PITTSBURGH POST JAMES PERARR, EDITORAND PROPRIE 10-8. THURSDAY MORNING, PEB. 20. OITY MATTERS

Murdoon gave the first of his admirable readings at Concert Hall, last evening, to an overflowing house. His elecution pleased all present and the force and truthfulness which characterized his stage personations rendered his entertainment the best of its character offered here for years. All went home satisfied that they years. All went home satisfied that they had been privileged in listening to Mr. Murdeb. To night the second reading comes off, when the subject will be T. Buchanan Read's poem of "The Wild Wagoner of the Alleghenies." This poem is unpublished, as yet, but it is based upon historical incidents in the history of our early struggle for independence, and breather the fiery spirit of patriotism which carried our forefathers through the ordeal carried our forefathers through the ordeal of the Beyolution. It is full of startling plotuces, and in its publication, Mr. Read will add another valuable work to Ameri can literature. We can give but one extract, a description of the Wild Wagoner, but it is sufficient to give one a desire to hear the whole. "On many a wildest mountain track,

While oft she tempest burst its wrack,
When lightning, like his mad whip lash,
Whistled round the team its crooked flash,
And horses reared in firty fright,
While near them burst the thunder-orash—
Then heard the gale his voice of might!

Ye knew him well, ye mountain in lee, Throughout your numerous dark defiles Ye knew him well, ye mountain in leading throughout your numerous dark defines where Juniata leaps away. On feathery wings of foam and apray. Or queenly 8n quehanna smiles, Proud in the gra work her thousand isles. Where poet and historian fing Their light o'er classic Wyoming. And you, ye green Lancastrian fields, Rich with the wealth which Ceres yields; And Onester's storied values and hills, in depths of rural calm divine, Where reels the fisshing Brandywine."

WILSON'S SCHOOL AND FAMILY READ ERS. -The Harpers have just issued a series of readers which excel, in point of typographical appearance and fineness of engraving, any school books ever issued. The plan of the series, especially the higher numbers, is to combine instruction in useful knowledge with instruction in the art of reading, for which purpose "object tessous! with eng avings; illustrating object in instruct history, physical science, soology, physiology, the vegetable king. dom; geology, physical geography, fatural philosophy, chemistry, astronomy, &c.— These lessons alternate with "miscellaneous divisions," abundantly illustrated by fine angravings, popularized to the capacities of children. Thus variety is obtained, comhining instruction with amusement. We have carefully examined the series and the borough, this evening at seven o'clock in the market hall, to take measures for method of instruction in reading now employed.
