PITTSBURGH POST

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1862.

THE NEW GOVERNMENT. On the 22d inst., last Saturday, while the people of the loyal States celebrated the birthday of the Father of his Coun try in a style of earnest enthusiasm rever before known by the oldest citi. all our gallant men who have gone to the zens, the conspirators, at Richmond, field of battle." were engaged in inaugurating a rebelgovernment, intended by them to endure for six years to come In our Congress, in our cities, towns and villages colleges and schools, Washington's fare-well address was read to anxious audiences; the patriotic lessons which it inculloates rebuking sapaticism and encourage ing the patriot were received with earnest and marked attention. Where are the modestly refraining from mentioning lines in that production upon which rebellion, against the Union, can lean for justification? It is a plea for the con-of the revolt itself.

late Southern reverses have not at all broken the spirit of the rebels; we do not believe it. What sent a thrill of. not only hope, but confidence, through the northern heart, must have dispatched a chill and gloom throughout every corner of the rebel States, where treason is to be found. Bold, daring and crafty men like Jefferson Davis, know well the value of assumed confidence upon their followers, and from him the world will never hear a word of doubt or despondency, until it proclaims the final c llapse of his rebel conspiracy. He and his leading coadju ors have too much at staka to abandon their enterprise so soon, To do to now, would leave him in a very precarious situation, his head and neck being in imminent danger. Like De Barada, the leading conspirator in the time of Richlieu, Davis has staked his all upon his enterprise; with him it is empire, power, and greatness staked against a traitor's doom; and like a desperado he will exhaust all means before he will abandon his arms. But with all his pluck, backed by ac incentive as great as ever actuated the leader of a conspiracy or revolt, the rebel cheiftain and government are doomed to a brief existence of misery and shame. Already the conspiracy staggers beneath the ponderous blows it that place, which has been built with the intention of shipping heavy ordinate the int has received; on every side despair nance? and why are the 5,000 troops is closing in upon its adherents, while on their way here from Washington, (if our government is just beginning to see rumor be true, and it comes from a good army could meet and drive back overhow certain she is to vindicate her power, and to establish for all time to come her ability to sustain self-government. Now, Mr. Stanton may not have made these remarks, but even if he did, and several more of a similar character, they would contain no compliment that Gen. McCiellan is not entitled to. What is the reason then, that he is pursued with such malignity by these extreme Aboli. tion publications? Why is it that a young and talented officer, who has devoted extraordinary exertions to the service, producing, in a few months, extraordinary results, is made the target for the malignity of the entire extreme in the position. The latter is every inch Abolition press? The cause of it is, a gentleman and just the man for the that Gen. McClellan has with the Press. that Gen. These are the reasons why these extreme partisans assail McClellan with such pertinacious fury; in assailing him they oppose the government and demonstrate that in this struggle for national existence, they have no interest save that which can be straced to slavery and its collateral connections. If Gen. McClellan, instead of devoting his time to the organization of cour important and stupendous army, had spent his time in Abolition intrigues fought in Mexico alongside of northern men and southern men and southern men and I knew that for the reasonation of the power of the both were brave.
