to secure a portrait of the great Washing ton, which is certainly unsurpassed and probably unequalled by anything of the kind since the original painting by Stnart of which this is a copy. It is a genuine work of art, and the proprietors, we are assured, have fixed the price so low—much lower than they at first intended -simply on account of the times, and so that every one who wishes can still procure a copy without feeling the amount it costs. The portrait is what is called "cabinet" or halfife size, just the size for the parlor-is finished in permanent oil colors, on canvass, and put up in a genuine heavy gilt oval frame, with plate glass in front, and seems in every part to be done in the very best style.
