DEFALERS

There is no more true-hearted gentleman, no more sincere patriot, than President Davis. There never triot, than President Davis. There never triot, than President Davis. There never was. He is the natural, unaffected, and pious statesman; he is the self-sacrificing, brave, and devoted Chief. Such a heart, such a spirit as his, working through the natural sympathies, can arouse a nation to deeds that would honor the proudest people of the proudest era of the world.

FROM CAIRO.

A Few Plain Facts. Considerable sstisfaction is expressed here at the rumored arrest of General U. S. Grant. The tremendous gale which he has had the misfortune to cause in the West, and, in fact, throughout the Union, by his recent conduct, will not be quieted until he is acquitted of his military mis-THERNAN & GETTY. WHOLESALE demeanors by those whose duty it is to enter into a rigid investigation of his late conduct. Wailing widows, father less children, and an outraged army demand it.—All the puffing dispatches of a self-styled member of his staff, who was allowed to occupy the Government telegraph from Fort Henry two or three hours the night after the battle, sending dispatches to a notorious New York journal to the delay of military business, will not avail.

The truth of the business will be told by other correspondents in due season, although they have been kept back a day or two longer by it. It is all the batter as the people will be better, prepared to the cuss it. Is it customary for commanding officers to allow correspondents of newspapers to send their dispatches overmulitary telegraph lines? If so, I have yet to see and hear of any instance of the lind, excepting the one referred to shove. However, as Johnson and Beauregard did not adopt the encient method of the linds ing of their enemy a month before attacking the new method of the linds. onduct. Wailing widows, fatherless chiling of their enemy a month before attack-ing him, it may be as well to say with Ly-sander—"When the lion's skin is too short, we must eke it out with the fox's."
