SPEECH OF Judge Thomas, of Mass., In Congress in Reference to the Confi cation Bill.

when Mr. Thomas (Mass.) made a speech, in have a right to shout, for you have fought the course of which he said.

The solution of the difficult problems of right and duty involved in the present state of affairs must be found in the careful study of the principles of the Constitution and the just and logical application of them to this new condition of things. It is by no narrow and rigid construction of the words application that the powers and the construction of the words applied to the construction of the words are the powers and the construction of the words are the powers and the construction of the words are the construction of the principles of the Constitution and the just and logical application of them to this new condition of them to this new condition of the words are the constitution and the just and logical application of them to this new condition of the tax bill the whole of section 75, including the taxes are the constitution and the just and logical application of them to this new condition of the words are the power of the constitution and the just and logical application of them to this new condition of the tax bill the whole of section 75, including the taxes are the constitution of the words are the constitution of the words are the constitution of the constitution of the constitution and the c narrow and rigid construction of the words of the Constitution that the powers and duties of Congress on these subjects are to be ascertained. Every provision must be carefully construed, in view of the great objects the Constitution was ordained to effect, and with the full recognition of the powers resulting from clear implication, as well as express grant. In my humble pudgment there has been and is now but one issue before the country, and that is, whether the Constitution of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land.

ELEVEN Illinois regiments have voted on the new constitution of that State, and the States, nor through the States upon us as citizens of the several States, but di-rectly upon us as citizens of the United premacy of the National Government with-in its sphere, and of the reserved rights of the States, are elementary. Between them there is no necessary conflict. Each is the complement of the other; both vital we may expect to hear them pronounce the the complement of the other; but vital parts of the political system under whose admirable distribution and adjustment of powers the people of the United States have had for seventy years incomparably the best and most benificent government the world has ever known; a government the world has ever known; a government now imperilled, not by reason of any inherent defect or any want of wisdom or foresight in its founders; not because we have outgrown its provisions; net because it is behind the age, but because it has fallen upon an age not worthy of it, which has failed to appreciate the spirit of wisdom, prudence and moderation in which it was founded. Such being the relation of the government of the United States to its citizens and to the States, the first ques-N B—We has the DIAMOND and ECLIPSE cal Cock Stoyen with Scap Stone Linings, which and the fire better than iron.

change in the least degree the legal rela-tion of the State to the Union. No pro-vision of the Constitution of the United States, no law or treaty of the United States can be abrogated or impaired there-by. No citizen of the United States re-siding in the seceded States is, by such ordinance of secession, deprived of the just protection or exempted from any of his duties to the United States. In contemplation of law the reciprocal duties of protection and allegiance remain unaffected. After the act of secession, the pro-vince and duty of the Government of the United States are the same, according t the full measure of its ability, as before, to enforce, in every part of the Union, and over every inch of its territory, the Constitution and laws of the United States.
