No purpose, however humane, benifi-cent, or attractive, can divert our steps what is writ is writ. In seeking to change it by force of arms, we become the rebels we are striving to subdue. The people do not desire a bitter and remorseful struggle over the dead body of the Constitution. We may raise armies and navies, and pour out as water the treasure and life blood of the people, but we can neither think not act wisely, live well or die well for the republic unless we keep clearly and always in view the end of all our labors and sacrifices, the Union of our fathers and the Cor stitution, which is its only bond. No thoughtful man can believe there is a possibility of reconstructing the Union on any basis, or that it is within the province of Congress in any other butthe peaceful way of amendment, to make the effort. The propositions for confiscation include the entire property of the rebels, real and perry sonal, for life and in fee. The mind in stinctivally shrinks from a proposition like stinctively shrinks from a proposition like this. It relucts to include in one "fell swoop" a whole people. It asks anxiously if no consideration is to be had for dif-ferent degrees of guilt; if the same meas-ure is to be meted to those who have been forced into it; if no consideration is to be given to the fact that allegiance and pro-

Those leaders should case of the rights. Those leaders should atone for their crime by the just penalty of the law. "But you cannot," says Burke, "indict the whole of the people; you cannot apply to them the ordinary rules of criminal jurisprudence." To state the proposition to confiscate the property of eleven States is to confute it; is to shock our common sense and earne of invites. our common sense and sense of justice, it to forget not only the ties of history and o kindred, but those of a common humanity

The act of general confiscation would defeat the great end the government has in view—the restoration of order, union and obedience to law. Apart from the injustice and impolicy of these acts of confiscation, I have not been able to find in the Constitution the requisite authority to pass them. he requisite authority to pass them.

cone cone law, would be violated if private p change the nature of things, can converted loyalty into treason, or devotion into hostility. If there be to-day in Tennessee, or Georgia, or South Carolina, even, a loyal subject of the United States, "faithful among the faithless found," the Government is not at war with him. While using the powers and appliances of war for the purpose of subduing the rebellion we are by no means acting within the pale of the Constitution. We are seeking domestic tranquility by the sword the Constitution has placed in our hands. In the path of war, as of peace, the Constitution is our guide and our light—the cloud by day the pillar of fire by night. The recognition of the "belligerent rights" of the rebels by foreign powers can, as between the sovereign and his subjects, have no other or further effect. Such recognition (if known to the law of nations) proceeds upon the ground that the revolution is not dissolved. Had this been done, the chamber might have been tenanted half an hour previously. On approaching the bed, the most curious sight of all was seen, and this it is which affords the only clue to the mystery. The couch held the bed, half in and half out, lay another skeleton of a female, and on the floor, underneath the bed, half in and half out, lay another skeleton of the most curious sight of all was seen, and this it is which affords the only clue to the mystery. The couch held the held, the held, the half in and half out, lay another skeleton of a female, and on the floor, underneath the bed, half in and half out, lay another skeleton of a female, and on the floor, underneath the body; being many, are one body."
