That M. Mercier would not make an There was a lady with him in a round velvet hat, and a vail down, that came exactly to her mouth, and tantalized, and at the same time discouraged. The contrast to the burly baritone—for so I dub-

It follows that the mission of M. Mercier to the Confederate Government is also a voluntary effort of the Emperor of the French for the restoration of the Union, on the basis laid down by the President and Mr. Seward, and gloriously vindicated by the armies of the Union. The President could not but consent and approve of M. Mercier's communication, because it involved no armistice on our part, no shatement of the demands of the United States Government for the unconditional submission of the rebellion, but sustained the President in his defence of the Constitution and Union in their original spirit, letter and integrity.

When M. Mercierreturned from making his communication at Richmond most significant events followed. He was borne comment that this betrayal was owing to a seconds the precious deposit in my hand.

I saw them next in Paris, in the Customs' foffice, where the huge trunks seemed bursting with precious things. One of the disembowelers, having done his savage work, sweeps away the huge monster to make room for others, and thus brings the direction close under my eye—a coronet also under it—"S. E. Le Comte Becco, Palazzo Becco, Firenze."

I say to myself, still clutching the diamond casket, that it was easy to see the tokens of rank and breeding. Do as you will, you cannot hide such things under a bushel. Ancient lineage always will betray itself. It did not occur to me at the moment that this betrayal was owing to a his communication at Richmond most sig-nificant events followed. He was borne moment that this betrayal was owing to very conspicuous card, and was in that sense no self-betrayal. and also that I had

To stop there until his heavy baggage was got in; for he made no concealment of his disgust when I brushed by him in the passage. I openly smiled with ill-concealed contempt; to her I cast another of those reassuring glances of comfort, as who should say: "Be of good cheer, lovely one; there is a protector fer you under the roof, and the number of that protector's chamber is forty-nine. numero outor's chamber is forty-nine, numero qua-rante neuf. Fear nothing." All this l threw into one glance of astonishing mean-ing, and I think she understood me. [To be continued.]
