From the Dublin University Magazine THE CASKET OF JEWELS. | Continued from Yesterday. | During that Paphian voyage I may say I traveled over all her mind. She kept nothing from me. He used her barbarously. She did not indeed tell me this; her gentle nature would not admit such a disclosure. Rather with an exquisite art I extracted it.

Rather with an exquisite art I extracted it all from her, she being unconscious. All the while, too, I kept up—passively admitted, perhaps, would be the proper form of putting it—the innocent fiction of the diplomatist. I was the accredited minister, traveling, say with secret dispatches, for Mr. Odo R.—II, Secretary of Legation; a nice and delicate mission, for, as is well known, we have no direct diplomatic relations with the S—e of R—me.

Here, at last, is Civita Vecchia, and here is well known, we have no direct diplomatic relations with the S—e of R—me.

Here, at last, is Civita Vecchia, and here at last we go ashore from Cleopatra's galley. It is a Sunday. We are rowed ashore in boats. Ursa Major still sulky. Cencing now resuming velvet hat down to chin. Her maid, his valet, an ill-looking fellow, which made up the suite of the "Illustrissimo Signor II Conde Becco." and all the heavy baggage. We passed through the ordeal by Custom House together; went to the railway together, and flew away to Rome together. "O Giorno fellow in the moment—"Ah, Giorno felice. Quallow bella vista. Ah ei ancora denique eterno." Whether this dialect was strictly pure and correct is not for me to say; but it seemed to have a prodigious effect. She looked at me with wonder.

"What, dear Metternich," she said,
"you can speak Italian. Ah! wily, wily diplomatist!" and she shook her finger at me playfully.

"Poco-poco," I answer, with some modesty; and meeting her humor.

"Where is your biglietta? The conduttore will be asking for it presently."
Sae il mio casketta is gestime humbers. See, il mio casketta is getting burden some: but I shall soon have done with it.

"Yes." she said, knowingly, "and a certain Cardinal will know something of it resently."

"Hush!" I say, cautiously, looking round: "heaven knows how many spies are within ear-shot." It was true. But an hour more of the casket. I should de-liver it at once—have done with it forever, and return to spend my first evening is nd return to specific Rome with them.
"Whisper," she said, as we left the railway carriage, and I was looking round for a cab; "why should you leave us now? why should you leave us low?

We may be going the same way—the same road. Where do you wish to leave your—dispatches?"

"No. 43, Via Condotti." "That is exactly on our road to the Palazzo. You shall stay with us at the Palazzo. You must have a room there."

"But," I was saying, "the Conde—"
"Never mind him. He, of course, will "Never mind him. He, of course, will not like it. You must be prepared for a little crossness from him. We have all our trials. But perhaps you would shrink from encountering them for my sake. Why should I ask you? True, you have indeed been a protector and a shield to me during these last few happy days, and now——"
I smiled on her again. I had a pleasant little Italian fragment ready; but, instead, only smiled on her. It at once quieted and the sale dealers to their extensive and varied stock of Fishing Tackles.

Their Factory, "NEPTUNE WORKS" only smiled on her. It at once quieted and eassured her.

"We will take him with us in the car she said to the bear; "it is all in our way."

He grumbled and growled savagely. We looked at each other. We expected this. Grumbling and growling he was helped into the carriage; grumbling and growling he flung himself back in the seat.

He feared me, I think. Just as we were starting, he roared out, "Diavolo! where is that beast Beppo?" This was the valet. that beast Beppo?" This was the valet.
"He is outside, dear, on the box with Caterina." Her maid.
"Let him come down again, and come in here. My head is heavy."
She whispered to me that his head became heavy, very heavy often, and in such cases he leant it on Beppo's shoulder and slept it away. I smiled intelligence to her.

"Then we must have Beppo in," I said.
"Diavolo!" I continued, shouting from the window; descend Traditore. You are "Si Signor," he said, respectfully touch ing his hat. It was marvelous this wonderful and sudden command of a difficult tongue. I have heard of French in six weeks; but here was Italian in an hour.

We rattled through the Roman streets all now lit up. Very strange and new it appeared to my eyes, and yet with a certain familiarity, as of old acquaintance. I pointed out to her the various objects of interest.

"San Pietro! Ecco," I said in a transport of enthusiasm, as the famous dome loomed into view.

"Where are we going?" I asked; "we are a long time getting to Via Condotti."

"Ah!" she said, shaking her fingers at me, "you know more of these things than you will admit. You have been here before on secret missions. Every stern and fore on secret missions. Why will you not trust me? And yet it is very natural, too natural!"

I shook my head. Some way through life I have always had this smack of familiarity with these things never known before.
