Gen. Grant to Hold his Command It is understood that General Grant is still to hold his command of one column of the army. The organization of the of the army. The organization of the army into divisions and columns is not yet complete. The reasons given for this course of General Halleck are that any censure or suspension of General Grant would reflect unfavorably upon himself.

It appears that General Halleck also TEN LINES make a square. About eight words would reflect unfavorably upon himself. It appears that General Halleck also ruptedly their operations. All the more trusted to the weakness of the enemy, and serious wounds of the Imperial Guard and he expected to be up in time to take part in the attack when Buell joined Grant. The latter made certain dispositions and movements also in obedience to orders from General Halleck in St. Louis. These face the reasons given by some for the account of the bivouse of the ambulances. Never had there been so hard a day for me, it had been almost impossible for me. movements also in obedience to orders from General Halleck in St. Louis. These are the reasons given by some for the acquiescence of Gen. Halleck in this course.

At all events there is quite a jealousy between the officers in General Buell's between the officers in General Buell's comman! and those in General Grant's, the former claiming that they saved the day and whipped off the enemy, while the latter got the credit of it. Something may be taken from either. Buell did fight well on Monday, for he has some good men, while the task of holding the enemy at bay was a great one, but from all accounts would have heard done out to as well with would have been done quite as well with-out Grant in person as with him. Another and last excuse of Grant's friends is that me; it had been almost impossible for me to restrain my tears in those moments when I was endeavoring to sustain the courage of my soldier patients."

A more catholic hearted man than Larrey never breathed; a fellow-creature had only to need his professional assistance, and be he Englishman, Austrian or Rus-sian, he was his friend at once. He held that a surgeon had no enemies except dis-ease and death, and on one occasion almost perished of a malignant fever contracted from some countrymen of our own who and last excuse of Grant's friends is that they see no reason why he should be singled out as an example of inefficiency and blundering when the thing is so common. There is of course no answer to this, but but that his case is so aggravated, and came near being so fatal, that his debasement may be a warning to others.

With the armies of his beloved master, Napoleon, Larrey visited in turn almost every country in Europe, of each of which he has something novel to say, since his view of all things is taken from so unusual a stand-point; but the most striking of all his experiences is without doubt his narrative of the campaign in Russia. During rative of the campaign in Russia. During that awful expedition the surgeon-in-chief of the Grand Army went on foot. Cold, he had convinced himself, was only the predisposing cause of frost-bite, and the heat which succeeds the cold was the real cause of the mischief. Those who rode, upon arriving motionless at the bivouac, experienced an irrepressible deed in the Hygeia hospital. The kind treatment which they have received has completely subdued them. One of them said, "I wish I could only go to South Carolina and tell the people how kind you are to us. They would never fight another battle." They say that the rebel anthorities do not allow the soldiers to hear about the ers by the North. If they did the men would refuse to fight against such friends.

Upon telling a North Carolinian about the rebels burning the Navy Yard at Norfolk, he exclaimed, 'What fools! I wish something hard would hit them, and knock a little sense into them." Their wounds are all very bad, much worsethan those of our all very bad, much worse than those of our stames. The hope of reaching their great soldiers. They do not seem to bear their goal, Moscow, animated them to an ex soldiers. They do not seem to bear their suffering as patiently as our men. Doubt-less their state of mind has something to the four hundred thousand fighting men who had crossed the Nieman were reduced to less than a quarter of that num-

"At length, on the fourteenth of September, on reaching an eminence in the road, the advanced guard suddenly caught sight of Moscow. As all the battalions of the army reached that part of the road, they halted, and the sound of 'Moscow' reverberated through their ranks. It was a moment of intoxication. After a short halt, they continued their onward course; and as the old city of the czars of Musco-This is considerably lower than any pre-vious estimate we have seen, and we have the French soldiers increased. Beneath them in survey, were fifteen hundred palaces, with gardens and parks, and thousands of houses of a perfectly new architecture, tiled or roofed with polished iron of various devices. From the midst 7,000 iron of various devices. From the midst 520,000 of these abodes arose hundreds of churches
