

The Union as it was The Constitution as it is!

SATURDAY MORNING, JUNE 21. A Reading matter on every page.

PAUSE AND REFLECT!

Here, on the eve of those final success es which, in the judgment of wise men, are practically to re-establish the power of the old Union, it is fit and profitable to look about us-to consider and take coun sel, one with another and each with all, on the juture policy of the nation.

All thoughtful men are seriously an ter the war. The duty and the task of rewill fall upon the calm, reflecting, steadyminded men of the country. The disunion extremists of the South, having utterly fail ed in their insolent appeal to the sword, must now be dealt with by the commo sense and forbearance of the nation, which, at the same time, must resolutely curb the insane disunion extremists of the North, who, with wild frenzy, are preparing to torture the fallen foe, after the old manne of fanatics and savages.

If Abolitionism is not crafty, and cunning and selfish, it is nothing-bold, generous self-sacrificing it never was; it never car be. To the lasting injury of the country, and by the mere accident of a most foolish quarrel among those who respected the Constitution and desired to maintain it, the Abolitionists found themselves, as in full possession of the federal government. They had a majority in Congress. and a "prior claim," a "first mortgage" on the President's sympathies and opin ions. The treacherous resort to arms by heir brother extremists of the South and there seemed to be nothing between strife, he felt that conservative opinion alone could save the Union, and that he NER. and PHILLIPS. and JOHN BROWN. And now that we are promised a breathing space from the excitement of the contest, station is La Puebla, where we shall licar how to assist the President and to save the country from the force and guile of Abolition fensicism enough that their day will be over. Fools and fanatics may rave about gibbets and gaillotines, and clamor for their erection at every cross-road in the seceded States; but men who hearken to the teachings of history, men who accept and profit by the daily lessons of life, know that, besides being inhuman, it never has been considered good policy to exterminate a conquered good policy to extend that manna will illusory expectation that manna will be showered upon us, with gold spoons to eat it with, if we only wait patiently. It is all moonshine to look for such things, and even thus given in the showered upon us, with gold spoons to eat it with, if we only wait patiently. It is all moonshine to look for such things, and even thus given in the showered upon us, with gold spoons to eat it with, if we only wait patiently. It is all moonshine to look for such things, and even thus given in the showered upon us, with gold spoons to eat it with, if we only wait patiently. It is all moonshine to look for such things, and even thus given in the showered upon us, with gold spoons to eat it with, if we only wait patiently. It is all moonshine to look for such things, and even thus given in the showered upon us, with gold spoons to eat it with, if we only wait patiently. It is all moonshine to look for such the showered upon us, with gold spoons to eat it with, if we only enemy. In the rage and heat of battle, to destroy and to conquer is the purpose of the encounter, but brave and generous men do not kill their defeated enemies in cold blood. Non-combatants of the Sumner, and Giddings, and Wendell Phillips school, who would fly from a dagger of lath, will talk about hanging and torturing the conquered enemy as savagely as ever the French Revolutionary committee did, but can they produce conformity in that way? To deliver the prostrate and con- stomach for this wanton invasion of a naquered rebels over to them would be as that never injured France, but now that the honor of the national arms is inhorrible as the Indian practice of handing over to the squaws for torture the enemies their warriors had taken alive in battle. 'To conquer the Rebellion was a terrible work, but one of short du ration compared with again restoring the Union in the hearts of the rebels. If we shall have federal elections again all over the Union, the Abolitionists know well enough that they will be doomed to their former insignificance in political power. Hence they wish to reduce the seceded States to a territorial condition. Hence pected of containing something, it was they wish to emancipate, confiscate, hang, draw and quarter without distinction and without remorse. Shall they be permitted to do this? This is the question on which we are to pause and reflect. If the state of popular feeling in the se ceded States continues as it is, if Union feeling cannot be developed and encouraged, if it shall be necessary to maintain the policy of "letting the Gulf States go," it was because the Tribune knew that it was not a possible thing to maintain the Union on the Abolition platform And now that we have fought a most terrible war for the re-establishment of the Union, for the integrity of the Constitution, shall we permit Abolition fanatics to keep the Union severed by their hateful ing that mad proposition. We do not wish age them to come North to displace white laborers, who, after the war, will be numerous enough, and who, we fear, with all the rest of the people, will see gloomy times. But if the States shall see proper legally, under the Constitution, to abolish slavery gradually, so that no convulsions, no distress, no violence will ensue, we have Heaven will propose the mean of having taken down the Federal flag of the South in rebelling at the election of the National States to depose him and create a military dictator in his his place!"

The Delta gives the following account of the execution, on the 7th inst:, by order of Maj. Gen. Butler, of William B. Mumford, convicted by a military court of having taken down the Federal flag of the South in rebelling at the election of the Confederate States to depose him and create a military dictator in his his place!"

The Confederacy proceeds to argue against the proposed deposition, and in so doing, unawares, makes an unanswerable argument against the folly and madness of the South in rebelling at the election of merous enough, and who, we fear, with hope Heaven will prosper the movement. from the Mint on the 26th of April: If any State, following the prudent example of Pennsylvania, shall, quietly and in good order, gradually free her slaves, sadly speculating on what we shall do afuniting the now divided Commonwealths But this won't suit SUMMER, and PHIL-

A Good Guess about Mexico. Geo. It is indubitably true, as Mr. Train says, that so far the French people have had no volved, there will be but one party in the imperial dominions. Not only expect to see a large army sent against Mexico, but a very hostile feeling will be manifested toward England for withdraw ing from the alliance at so critical a period in the enterprise.—New York World.
