Fall River, in Massachusetts, he had a misunderstanding with his keeper, whom he compelled to fly for his life. Finding himself at liberty he started off at a furious pace, attacking every animate object that he found in his path. He threw a horse and wagon into the air, smashing the ve-bicle all to pieces, and then carried the nangled remains of the horse a distance of fty teet, to a pond, into which he threw the lifeless hody. He next encountered another horse and wagon, and made kindling wood of the latter, the horse escaping by flight. Coming to a third wagon he smashed up the whole establishment, threw the horse thirty feet into an adjoining field, and then, tearing down the fence, brought the body of the horse back and laid it down in the road. Overtaking still another horse and wagon he demolished the vehicle, and, the horse escaping with the fore wheels, he pursued him for eight miles, without being able-to overtake the fright-ened steed. In this race he traveled a portion of the distance at the rate of a mile in three minutes. SELECT TALE. Warnings and Providences. The proof of the truth of the following tatement, taken from the Courrier de l

As the junior partner in a commercial house at Lyons, I had been travelling for some time on the business of the firm. some time on the business of the arm, when one evening, in the month of June, 1761, I arrived at a town in Languedoc, where I had never before been! I put up in a quiet inn in the suburbs, and being very much fatigued, ordered dinner at once, and went to bed almost immediately after, determining to begin very early

I was no sooner in hed than I fell into deep sleep, and had a dream that made he strongest impression upon me.
I thought that I had arrived at the same town, but in the middle of the day in-stead of the evening, as was really the case—that I had stopped at the very same inn, and gone out immediately, as an occupied stranger would do, to see whatever was worthy of observation in the place. I walked down the main street into another street, crossing it at right angles, and apparently leading into the and apparently leading into the country. I had not gone very far when I came to a church, the Gothic portal of which I stopped to examine. When I had satisfied my curiosity I advanced to a hy-path which branched off from the main

Obeying an impulse which I could neipath, though it was winding, rugged and unfrequented, and presently reached a miserable cottage, in front of which was a garden covered with weeds. I had no difficulty in getting into the garden, for the hedge had several gaps in it wide enough to admit four carts abreast. I approached an old well which stood solitary and gloomy in a distant corner, and looking down its solitary and gloomy is a distant corner, and
