White House 28,—8 P. M. After being driven in the swamps on his front, Jackson rested till early on Friday morning, when he again commenced the assailt on the front and flank of Porter.—The force of Jackson outnumbering Porter's two to noe, rendering it necessary to ward Bottom's Bridge, and concluded to ward Bottom's Bridge, and concluded to take the short distance of wenty miles. Abtile had been fought on our right that day, but it was impossible to ascertain, at headquarters, any of the particulars.

The supposition was that Fitz John Porter was attempting to gain possession of a coveted hill on the South side of the Chickahominy, and had crossed for that purpose. The road to the White House, or at least The road to the White House, or at least the measurement of the washed and provided to the word of the Chickahoming and the same of the white House. Stoneman received orders to fall back protect the railroad on his retreat, which he did successfully, and camped at Tuntania in the within a mile and half of the words to take overwhelming good. The river was now crowded with descending craft of all sizes and shapes, ladened with provisions and stores—barges lashed together and crowded with jibbering "contrabands," looking like flies upon the James River. That this was a deliberate piece of strategy, and no "skeddile," as some panic stricken army the admonition, "Goback!" "Goback!" to make out, is proved by the fact that Brooks, which left Old Point with us to bring down the wounded, we seemed to be bring down the wounded, we seemed to be
