arming the slaves in order to make Union soldiers of the And, what is still more to be wondered at, in Charleston, M. Clay and his coadjutors depreciating the purpose of the war, because the government will not recommend a course of policy which has already been tried and exploded. But, now that these schemes have been tried and found wanting, we may indulge the pleasing anticipation of work in earnest, and that speedily; and that our government instead of heeding the ravings of enthusiasts, will devote itself to the work in hand; and bring about a speedy and lasting reunion of our now disunited Confederation.

THREE NUISANCES. The New York World is disgusted by no less than three nuisances; there are others, of course, but the three enumerated are intolerable. The first of these is a Western contemporary, which publishes false reports from the Western department; the second is a Mr. Charles Mackay, a small beer poet, who uses to indicate sickly poetry; but who of late has become the war correspondent of the London Times, taking the place which "Bull Run Russell" grew weary of filling; the third and greatest of the disgusting trio is this described by the World itself.

"The third nuisance is the frightful little spouters, both secession and abolition, who, each for their own reasons, are doing their best to disgrace the elements. The rebel sympathizer does it because he sees the sure doom of the rebellion unless the greatest movement of the loyal North can be somewhat unquestionably prevented. The abolitionist does it because he fears that so many white men in the field will crush the rebellion without any serious promise arising. These two classes of mischief-makers are both a hand and a foot, each to their own undoing, each to their own destruction. We are glad to see that our authorities are at last beginning to take them in hand. The consequence of a few would inspire a wholesome fear in all. Doubtless these men have multiplied too, just as for as such promotion don't tend to hinder the practical work of the government in suppressing the rebellion, but which in fact, it is certainly does when it impedes efforts, no forbearance should be shown it. It goes direct and to the enemy, and better than outright treason. No other government on the face of the earth has so long and so bravely sustained its position. It is asking too much of our government should be indifferent to it in time of war, and where even its own assistance is depending on the issue. There is a law on the statute book which arms the government with all the authority necessary: let it be enforced. The other nuisances have named may be left to public opinion; but this should be atoned by official intolerance."

SOUTHERN NEWS. All depends on Fort Darling. That blockade may yet prove ineffectual, and the fate of Richmond may depend upon the plans and determination with which our batteries will contest the harbor. It is given out that the defenses at the Bluffs are impregnable, and the people are lulled into apathy by the assurance of the scientific strength of the land batteries. It is being placed in charge of the fort, and given out in regard to the works which protect Beaufort, in South Carolina, which line the Mississippi river for several miles below New Orleans. The blockade of Norfolk from the possibility of success is now being renewed. Let it be renewed. Let Fort Fort was was without out the ability of a single gun of the enemy; the New Orleans led by many in Fort Jackson, and without a single shot, from the enemy placed in the vicinity for its defense, and that Norfolk was evacuated a sudden surprise, no enemy pursuing, the enemy himself being amazed at the precipitancy of our retreat from a position they themselves declared to be impregnable.

Mr. Dawson discussed with candor, all the leading national questions. He went thoroughly and heartily for sustaining the Government, in every constitutional effort to put down the existing and senseless rebellion, and pledged himself, if elected, to resist to the utmost the measures to vindicate the constitution, and assert its supremacy over the whole country.

Mr. Dawson's speech was able, patriotic and eloquent, and was received with universal approval. His election is considered certain. Even John Woods, by refusing to run against the government, admits that it is impossible to defeat him.

The Crop throughout the South. One of the leading merchants of Richmond, in the South, furnishes us with the following very interesting letter. It is dated at Vicksburg, Mississippi, and reached us a few days ago. The writer says:

One of the severest droughts that ever last culminated in this country has at length a good old-fashioned summer of rain. As it passed through Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama, my breast swelled with emotion, at my sight was rising with fields of waving corn, where lately bloomed the stunted stalk of the South. Last year I made a similar one of these States and saw immense fields of cotton, but no corn save a few little patches for plantation use now the reverse is the case—a little patch of corn and a big field of cotton. Had
