From Dr. Hoofland's German Bitters, D. D., Editor of the Pittsburgh Post, August 18, 1862.
I have been afflicted with jaundice for several years, and have tried every medicine known to man, but without success. I was advised to try your German Bitters, and after using a small quantity, I experienced a relief, and after a few days, I was completely cured.
I am now in perfect health, and I feel obliged to state that your German Bitters is a most valuable medicine, and I recommend it to all who are afflicted with jaundice, or any other disease arising from

DAILY POST.
HOW A BRAVE MAN SAVED A CITY.
The following incident, which is related by an eye-witness of the scenes described, most happily illustrated the power possessed by a single individual of a determined will, in whom are combined coolness, judgment and fearlessness of danger, for an unorganized mob of savages, thirsting for blood, and in their blind fury reckless of consequences. The 17th of August, 1812, was a day that will be long remembered by the people of Detroit, for it was on that day that the old and imbecile Hall in the capacity of Governor of the Michigan Territory, shamefully surrendered his important post, then garrisoned by two thousand brave and efficient troops to the British and Indians.

As soon as the articles of capitulation were signed by the British, they retired from the city, and took possession of the place followed by a rabble of vile camp-followers, who, in their haste, for some weeks had been attached to the British camp. Of course the citizens were thrown into the utmost dismay at the sight of the British, and the British were not without the knowledge that they might at any moment be attacked by the savages and their camp-followers. The British were not without the knowledge that they might at any moment be attacked by the savages and their camp-followers. The British were not without the knowledge that they might at any moment be attacked by the savages and their camp-followers. The British were not without the knowledge that they might at any moment be attacked by the savages and their camp-followers.

Thus the energetic conduct of this brave officer on that critical occasion saved the city of Detroit from the torch of the savages, and the people from indiscriminate slaughter. In a great crisis one brave clear-headed man is worth many timid statesmen or cowardly politicians.

The powerful voice of the white man now stood upon the scene, and the savages with an electric flash, and once more resolved to feel the force of his arm.
The tempest of angry passion was instantly subdued, and the white man, low murmurs, while the entire mass, as if impelled by one common sentiment, moved together to the other side of the street, and raising their faces to where the brave officer was standing, seemed to await his further orders.
"This is well, my friends," cried he,
"Now let every brave man follow me.
The cowards may remain behind and secure their plunder."
So saying, the colonel descended from his elevated position, and led them to the common beyond the town, where, mounting a stump he dashed them with a good barrel of whisky while he drank off the Commissary's store for a barrel of whisky.
When it arrived he invited the Indians to drink. The barrel was soon emptied, and another was sent for, till under the influencing influence of the strong water the other warriors and camp-followers were retained from further violence. Throughout the night, however, there were frequently heard, amid the drunks, the threatening words of "fire, blood, and plunder."
But Col. McKee had provided against every trouble from the discontented spirits among the Indians, by selecting the other warriors and camp-followers to be the dwellings of the citizens, who had been most strongly threatened. These fellows, wraying themselves in their manly kicks, stretched themselves on the doorsteps as a guard to protect the inhabitants from any sudden outbreak of savage violence into the good quarters of the city's citizens.

When the news of the surrender reached the British, they were not without the knowledge that they might at any moment be attacked by the savages and their camp-followers. The British were not
savages and their camp-followers.
