There must be an uncomfortable beating of the heart at such a sight. I doubt if many could retain both life and reason through such an ordeal.

I am a doctor. Years ago I was very poor and very young. I came from my own country with my diploma, and nothing else. I found that the great cities of the new world were full of doctors, young and poor as I was. I left them and went westward. I settled in the State of Indiana. It was then one great forest, with clearings here and there for fields of corn, and rude log houses. Any one led a hard life there and doctor's, it seemed to me, worst of all. Miles and miles of hard riding, through wind and mud, to visit patients who could pay nothing; miles back again to steal a 'ew moments repose, being "very bad!" I know the man spoke the truth and taking my box of surgical instuments under my arm, followed him to the spot where his horse was tied. Mine was already saddled; my little darkey knew well enough what the visit protended, and had him ready. We were off in a few moments.

Few words were spoken as we rode along through the darkness. I asked along through the darkness. I asked whether the wounds were serious, and my companion replied—"I'm afeard they he, doctor." I asked if the injured man was young or old, and he answered—"Rising forty;" and then, after a few words upon the badness of the road; we was young or old, and he answered—

I followed him. The room was feebly lit by flickering candles. About a bed in the centre were grouped five men and a woman, large and broad-shouldered persons wishing to join the Eattery will oal at and a woman, large and broad-shouldered as any of her masculine companions. A child, too, lay crying in its cradle, but no one seemed to notice him. They made way for my approach, and I saw a figure stretched unon the bed. "Tain't of no use, doctor," he said, as I bent over him; "I'm a gone coon. Doctor's stuff ain't no account to me now."

I did not believe him. His face was not that of a dying man, and the wounds scarcely seemed dangerous. "These bullets are bad things to have in one's side," I said, "but men have lived through more than that. Cheer up!"

The group around the bed glanced at each other, and the woman shook her head at me as though she would have said 'Never mind his words.''
I did what I could for him. The bullet were extracted, the wounds bound up. He was weak, but not desperately so. I looked at him and smiled. "How now," said I. "Tain't no use—the watch is stoppin tast." he answered.

Then, for the first time, I noticed that peside him on the bed lay a great, old-ashioned silver watch, the case battered, fashioned silver watch, the case battered, the face discolored; and that it ticked with a strange, dall sound, as though it were very old and feeble.

"The watch has been injured by the bullets, I suppose," said I; "besides, all watches stop at times"

"Not this one, stranger," said the wounded man. "They've laughed about that watch a hundred times; now they'll find my story's true, I reckon. That watch and I will stop at the same minute."
