The Union as it was: The Constitution as it is! WEDNESDAY MORNING, SEPT. 17.

MEETING OF THE DEMOCRATIC STATE CENTRAL COMMITTEE... THE SAINT CHARLES HOTEL, in the city of Pittsburgh, on Tuesday, September 23d, 1863, at 4 o'clock p. m. of said day.

WHAT ABOLITION COMES FOR... It is not to abolish slavery, but to abolish the Union.

Now we suppose all these to be free, what shall we do with them? We shall of course give them rights of property and judicial remedies and other usual civil rights.

But it will be worse still in the Southern States. In many of them the negroes are so numerous that the two great parties would be the whites and the blacks.

And this would ruin our federal relations. Every national party must cultivate the friendship of the State parties.

But suppose that we do not generally allow them political rights. Then the whites will continue to be the ruling race, and the negroes will be subjects.

Remember the meeting to-night at Eckert's Hotel. All friendly to the Constitution are invited and expected to be present.

Not two of them alike. It is curious to notice the captions or headings the opposition papers place over their State ticket.

A CHANGE DEMANDED.

The New York Times and other highly respectable and influential Republican papers are becoming very vehement in their demands for a change in the administration of the government.

"It is not a change of policy which seems to us essential at the present moment. The reforms we urge are not in the interest of any faction or of any party.

"We should entertain the most profound distrust of any changes made in any such interest, or for the promotion of any such purpose. President Lincoln's policy of saving the Union at all hazards is the great necessity which shadows and underlies all other questions and all other interests.

"The New York Times and papers of its conservative class should have given this advice six months ago, at the rebellion by this time would have been crippled, if not actually crushed.

"The President reorganizing McClellan in chief command in the field, has already determined him to change his policy in the prosecution of further hostilities, or it shows a determination to let McClellan and Halleck have the management of them hereafter.

Speech of Hon. Horatio Seymour.

The Democratic Convention of New York, on Wednesday, nominated the Hon. Horatio Seymour for Governor by acclamation. Soon after, Governor Seymour appeared before the convention, and was greeted with immense enthusiasm.

Governor Seymour, when order became sufficiently restored, addressed the Convention in a speech of unusual force, brilliancy, eloquence and boldness.

After stating his unwillingness to accept the office under any other circumstances than those rendering it the duty of every man to do what was in his power to rescue the country from its present difficulties, he referred to the Democratic Convention held less than two years ago in this hall.

"The Convention of 1861, which was held in this hall, was the last of its kind. It was the last of its kind. It was the last of its kind. It was the last of its kind.
