EXTIRPATE THE CAUSE. This is the cry of the Abolitionists, and it was their ery long before the war began, door. We can all feel our calamities Slavery is the cause of the war: therefore without this exhibition of woe; it can do uant with hell, that ought not to be regarded; and that demand is made by those who have covenanted with God and the people, by solemn oath, to support the Constitution, and who, without this, could not have had any official power to exercise, add to the general gloom by unnecessary Official periury is what Abolitionists demand as a public duty, and it is through let us hide our tears and smother our official perjury that they expect God's blessing upon us in this great National-life struggle.

But even without our Constitution and as we can, and not add to our distress by our official oaths to support it, let us think unnecessary and ostentations exhibitions a little and we shall find that their logic is of unavailing woe. ntterly destructive of all peace and good will among men if carried into practices and demands war as the proper means of settling all conflicts of convictions in society. Men's acts proceed from their wills. and these are governed by their convictions; and it is the conflict of opinions that causes war, and not the object or institution about which convictions differ. No person, thing, or institution can be a cause of war, but differences of opinion about it may be. It is, therefore, these differences that are to be extirpated it we are to have peace, and not the persons who differ, nor the object of difference, if we follow their logic legically.

But they do not mean this. They mean that we must extirpate the thing about which people differ so seriously as to fall into war. Well, let them have it so, and then let them face the consequences of the intheir logic. Because two men quarrel about a tract of land or a house, extirpate to fight. He sought no notoriety. His to fight. He sought no notoriety. His to fight. it: because two lovers quarrel about the great aim was to do his duty to his fellow war. same woman, extirpate her: because par ents quarrel about the government of their children, abolish family government: because men quarrel about political systems, abolish them-or about schools, and tariffs, and maritime rights, and all forms of rights, and churches, and religion, and God, abolish, extirpate them all ! Shame on such logic! We need only expose, not answer it. It is evidently framed, not to discover truth, but to hide the vice of a foregone conclusion Will they then fall back on the other aspect of the question, and say we must extirpate the differences of opinion or conviction about slavery that have caused the war? Then, if we did not differ from them there would be no war and no cause of war. It is difference that makes conflict, and it requires both our conviction and theirs, combined together, and not those of either side alone, to make the difference. Our convictions are, therefore, just as much the cause of the war as theirs, if we are all to be charged with the opinions of the Abolitionists; and the way proposed is to extirpate their convictions, because they differ from ours, and neither side knows how to allow the other to differ organized revolution; and it is to break are at war.

But let us not drop the logic yet. It is at our alleged extreme difference of opinion that the war is to be aimed by the Abolitionists, and not at the armed organity by the United States: ization. This logic will, therefore, justify almost any war. All that is needed to start a war is a difference of conviction on any subject which the parties cannot set aside or solve by their logic. Thus civil wars are always justified, and that on both sides; and so are all wars: because each has the same right to war because the breach of the peace, or when the militia other differs from it in opinions in which is called upon to aid the civil process. both take a deep interest. . Thus it is just for Christians to make war upon Paganism, or Mohammedanism, or Judaism, or Catholies on Protestants. Thus is justilarmy. fied the Scotch Solemn League and Covenant "to extirpate popery and prelacy," and the league of the Guises against the Hugenots and against the Government of France that tolerated them, in order to extirpate Calvinism, and the mission of the Spanish Armada to extirpate the Protestant government of England, and every war on account of opinion that has afflicted our race.

No doubt differences of opinion do often lead to acts of violence that make war inevitable; but it is usually at the borders and between the border men that these right that it should have been in the left.

Since a right and from there the avaitation of the left side. He was found taken up in a state of insensibility and carried to a hospital, where it was found that his heart had been dislocated, the apparent was paring on those who were uttering the same position on the left.

Since a right side is the was a master in make an ment spreads. Here, nowever, there was no war of elements along the borders. All was peace and harmony there. It was in the moral and geographical extremes of the nation that the strife arose. Thence started the thunder clands, spreading their started the thunder clands, spreading their electric poison over the land as they approached each other, until they met midway and blasted the peace and prospects of a nation.

CLOSING UP. We trust that the gentleman who next nakes a motion to have all business in the city suspended for a certain period will give some good reason for his proposition. As it is, these frequent suspensions of the life of the city only add to the general deression and gloom. The proposition tself looks as if we desired to advertise our athiction, while our actions, in many nstances, expose our insincerity. Putting up our window-shutters in order to manifest our grief, and keeping open the door to accommodate customers, is the vilest hypocrisy, and we regret to say that several such demonstrations yesterday fell ander our observation. Others who comolied with the suggestion of the Mayor gave their employees an excellent opportunity, not to mourn, but to enjoy themselves, and they eagerly embraced it. In fact, this "outward mourning," although minently proper occasionally, would at the present time be honored more in its iolation than its observance. It does no uspended, and many people from the rural districts are sadly inconvenienced when they come to the city and find their avorite establishments closed for the day. In fact, the city yesterday re eminded one of a grave-yard, be nor repel invasion; nor can it revive those Even if the heart aches at some distress with which we may be afflicted let us not displays of public lamentation.
