

and excessively painful, and would not... he had given his last order to advance.

He had gained a point, however, which compelled him to expect every moment an attack, and to hold his position.

Nothing of all this was perceptible from the rebel lines. Some directions of the smoke of their guns, however, disclosed the formation of the country beyond the hills.

At 1 o'clock, the rebels on the right had a gloomy look. Hooker's troops were greatly exhausted, and the general away from the field.
