

The Union as it was The Constitution as it is

DECLINES THE HONOR.

The Pittsburgh Dispatch of yesterday contains the following card: Pittsburgh, Sept. 24.—Messrs. Editors: I observe by your paper of this morning that I was honored as one of the Vice Presidents...

BRECKINRIDGE TICKET.

The sharpers among the Abolitionists, such as Foster, have ticketed the Democratic candidates on our State ticket the crushing name of "Breckinridgers."

A PALMABLE HIT.

We direct the attention of the Gazette to the following slip in its commodity face from a citizen of Westmoreland county:

THE PRESIDENT'S PROCLAMATION.

Sudden Change of Opinion. The late emancipation proclamation of President Lincoln bothers our contemporary scribbles more than anything he has done since his inauguration.

"It is well known that the President has issued his proclamation ready some weeks since, that he laid it before his Cabinet and urged, with his usual earnestness and impressiveness of statement, the reasons for issuing it; that he found but two of the members adverse to the measure—Mr. Seward and Mr. Blair, whose objections were so strongly urged that he laid it for a time aside."

"Some weeks since" the Evening Post remarks, this proclamation was laid before the Cabinet, prior to the disastrous defeat of General Pope; and consequently "honest Abe" must have been satisfied of its utility even before he laid it before his ministers.

President Lincoln failed to recognize the subject in the same light in which it was viewed by the committee and their constituents. He reminded them that it did not at the present time live in an age of miracles, and he himself had not received, nor did he anticipate, any special revelation.

He plainly asked the committee what good could result from the issue of such a proclamation as he has since issued. This committee reached Washington on the 11th, and had their interview two days after. The committee returned home to Chicago, and made their report, from which we select the following summary:

dom to the slaves of rebels held out in that act. Even this promise, which Congress at its last session had made for the emancipation of the slaves, rebels had proven false.

Moreover, the negroes would be a decided burden upon us, and indeed they had already become so. But few days ago he had received from Major General B. Lee, at New Orleans, information that negroes which had already accumulated upon his hands were more than he would know how to dispose of.

The President also stated that there was another consideration which, in his estimation, was a most important one, but which they (the committee) had not taken into account. The border States had contributed largely and patriotically to volunteers to prosecute the war for the Union.

Whoever suggested Mr. White for one of the officers of the meeting, allied to the adopted citizens has sworn to support and defend. Besides, if Mr. White will look around he will perceive that those whose political heresies he has so many times combated are in the field with their party and their candidates; and in this country they do not even assume the dimly-tinged of "No Party," or "No Union Party."

Charles Sumner and the Negro. The Springfield (Mass.) Republican, a paper of decided Abolition tendencies, but which is not disposed to follow the lead of the radicals in all their ultra schemes, strongly denounces the action of the recent Massachusetts Convention, on account of its excessive glorification of Mr. Sumner.

Mr. Sumner is the idolator of a single idea, magnified and distorted entirely out of its legitimate relations to other ideas. This he does everywhere. We see it in his speech on the 17th of March, when he allude to us as a specimen of what we should be, and in his passage in his latest production—his letter to the late convention. It will be remembered that in this letter he speaks of the incident in which the little slave girl on her way to freedom, who was lifted upon the national cannon. This act of lifting this little girl to a cannon, and giving her a ride—a salute of common kindness which all of us who have horses riding in wheelbarrows are pronounced by Sumner to be the greatest, most touching and most suggestive act of the whole war.

What is this man talking about? "The brightest, most touching and most suggestive act of the whole war." Good Heaven! and one, two, three, four, five sons, and given them up with tearful gladness, to suffer and die, if need be, for the salvation of the country. It is to be noted, too, that in the high tide of life in the morning, he was at night dead and wounded on the field of battle, and his body was given to the blind and dumb to be gloriously scattered in ten thousand homes there have been weeping and despair among the bereft; a million men have been raised from the dead for the vindication of the national flag, and women have fought traitors pistol in hand, and conquered the armies of the South. And yet in all these things, Mr. Sumner can see nothing so "bright," or so "touching," as the incident of lifting a girl to a ride on a cannon!

Washington Gossip and Scandal. From the Washington correspondence of the Boston Journal. I will give the last bit of gossip, although it has a spice of scandal in it. For a long time it has been known that the rebels have had some means by which they gain the earliest and most reliable information that could come only from some official sources. For instance, the removal of General Hunter was alluded to in Jeff Davis' message long before the fact was known to our people. Many parties have been suspected and watched, but no one has been quite conspicuous in this way. The proof is said to be overwhelming and unquestioned. The party is one long suspected. General Halleck demanded that the party should be given up, and the party should be given up, and the party should be given up. Such is the rumor from lips of those who are usually well informed, and who have been seen in the cabinet of the President.

Besides, if Mr. White will look around he will perceive that those whose political heresies he has so many times combated are in the field with their party and their candidates; and in this country they do not even assume the dimly-tinged of "No Party," or "No Union Party."
