The Growing Sentiment of the Army and People.

One of the army correspondents of the Cincinnati Gazette, writing from the army of McClellan, on the Potomac, expresses the following as the growing sentiment of our troops:

"There is one way this war can be settled, and that in short order. Let the soldiers in the army vote on a settlement, and a mode would be proposed that would astonish the natives. It is beginning to be thought, and the belief is quite universal, that this is a mere political war; that a few in position, and a few who are making money, are delaying, and shifting, and pollyfoxing to make all they can out of it, and the soldiers are thoroughly disgusted. It is well known to them that the same officials are doing all they can to kill McClellan; that they disobey his orders, and throw obstacles in his way, and they are tired of this blowing hot and cold in the same breath. They want to fight—or they want to go home. Which shall it be? If delay is to be the order, they will vote for a peace—to a man they'll do it. It is thought there was more truth than poetry in Major Key's remark about 'settling the war on old Democratic principles,' and they want to see it settled without any more palavering."

The Difference Between Action and Talk.

The Washington correspondent of the Boston Herald says:

"One of the most laughable incidents of this raid is, that Alex. McClure, Chairman of the Republican State Committee of Pennsylvania, who made a ferocious speech on Wednesday, in Philadelphia, declaring that the rebellion should be put down, is the same gentleman who went to his home in Chambersburg on Friday and peaceably surrendered that place to the rebels! He has doubtless discovered that it is one thing to talk the rebellion and another to fight."
