DAILY POST.

SATURDAY MORNING, NOV. 15

The Age of Man.

But few men die of age. Almost all die of disappointment, passional, mental, or bodily toil, or accident. The passions kill men sometimes even suddenly. The common expression choked with passion, has little exaggeration in it; for even though not suddenly fatal, strong passions shorten life. Strong men often die young—weak men live longer than the strong, for the strong use their strength and the weak have none to use. The latter take care of themselves; the former do not. As it is with the body so it is with the mind and temper. The strong are apt to break, or, like a candle, run; the weak burn out. The inferior animals which live temperate have generally their prescribed term of years. The horse lives twenty-five years, the ox fifteen or twenty, the lion about twenty; the hog ten or twelve, the rabbit eight, the Guinea pig six or seven. The numbers all bear proportion to the time the animal takes to grow to its full size. But man, of all animals, seldom comes up to the average. He ought to live a hundred years, according to his pysological law, for five times twenty are one hundred; but instead of that he scarcely reaches an average of four times his growing period. The reason is obvious—man is not only the most irregular and intemperate, but the most laborious and hard-worked of all animals. He is always the most irritable of all animals, and there is reason to believe, although we cannot tell what an animal secretly feels, that, more than any other animal, man cherishes wrath to keep it warm, and consumes himself with the fire of his own reflection

Anecdote of a French Marshal.

Some time ago, while at a review, a murderous shot was fired at the late Marshal Castellane, from a regiment of Voltigeurs. He heard the whistling of the ball near his head, and, on taking off his cap, found that it lodged in it. Without saying a word to his staff he galloped up to the front of the regiment from which the shot proceedee, and cried out if he knew the unlucky dog who was such a bad shot he would certainly give him a week in the guard-house. Then turning to his staff, he said; "What do you think of this? a fellow in a crack corp who misses his man at thirty yards, certainly he ought to be broke." The Marshal would never allow any inquiry to be made into this attempt upon his life; but he resented it against the whole corps of Voltigeurs by never allowing any one of them to mount guard at his quarters.
