SELECT TALE.

ENCOUNTER WITH ROBBERS.

The hunter (though rarely) has been set upon by robbers, for the sake of the pack of furs he was carrying on his back to some of the sea-port towns on the coast to dispose of; but as the fur hunters are generally on foot, and, from habit of watching about either for hostile Indians or wild animals, they are always on their guard, and as the robbers well know they are to a man, riflemen who seldom miss their mark, they avoid them. During my rambles in the wilds and fastnesses of California, I became acquainted with many of them, some from the back settlements of the United States, others from Canada.—I have hunted for months with them, and witnessed some conflicts between them and wild animals in which the utmost daring and recklessness was exhibited by the hunter. These are not the men that robbers like to encounter, but I have said they sometimes take a fancy to the valuable pack of furs which, if they find any facility of obtaining, they make the attempt. It is the very climax of cruelty to plunder these poor fellows of packs which were got by outlaying for months in the depths of the forest and wilds of the country, and not unfrequently in the hunting grounds of a tribe of hostile Indians.

I once hunted for three months in company with a hunter well known in California. In ideas he was wild and imaginative in the extreme; but, in his acts of daring, etc., the most cool and philosophic fellow I ever knew. A commercial agent, or merchant at San Francisco, on whose veracity I know from experience I can depend, told me the following story of this man, which will at once illustrate his character. This hunter was, some months before I had fallen in with him, making the best of his way down the valley of the Tule lakes from the interior, with a heavy pack of furs on his back, his never-erring rifle in his hand, and his two dogs by his side. He was joined at the Northermost end of the valley by the merchant I have spoken of, who was only armed with his sword and pistols.—They had scarcely cleared the valley when a party of robbers galloped out before them. Four were whites, fully armed, and two Indians, with their lassoes coiled up ready to "throw."

The hunter told the merchant, who was on horseback, to dismount "and to cove." Fortunately for them there was a good deal of thicket, and trunks of large trees that had fallen were strewed about in a very desirable manner. Behind these logs the merchant and hunter quickly took up their position, and as they were in the act of doing so, two or three shots were fired after them without effect. The hunter coolly untied the pack of furs from his back and laid them beside him. "It's my opinion, merchant," said he, "that them varmints wants either your saddle-bags or my pack, but I reckon they'll get neither." So he took up his rifle, and the foremost Indian, lasso in hand, rolled off his horse. Another discharge from the rifle and the second Indian fell, whilst in the act of throwing the lasso at the head and shoulders of the hunter as he raised from behind the logs to hire. "Now," said the hunter, as he reloaded, lying on his back; to avoid the shots of the robbers, "that's what I call the best of the scrimmage, to get them brown thieves with their lassoes out of the way first. See the rascally whites now jumping over the logs to charge us in our cover."

They were fast advancing when the rifle again spoke out, and the foremost fell; they still came on to about thirty yards; another fell, and the other two made a desperate charge up close to the log. The hunter, from long practice, was dexterous in re-loading his gun. "Now, merchant," said he, "is the time for your pop-guns," meaning the pistols, "and don't be at all nervous. Keep a steady hand, and drop either man or horse. A man of them shall not escape." The two remaining robbers were now up with the log, and fired each a pistol shot at the hunter, which he escaped by dodging behind a tree close by, from which he fired with effect. As only one robber was left, he wheeled round his horse, with the intention of galloping off, when the pistol bullets of the merchant shot the horse from under him. "Well done, merchant," said the hunter, "you've stopped that fellow's gallop." As soon as the robber could disentangle himself from the horse, he took to his heels and ran down a sloping ground as fast he could. The hunter drew his tomahawk from his belt and gave chase after him. As he was more of an equestrian than a pedestrian, the nimbleness of the hunter shortened the distance between them, and the last of the robbers fell.

Thus perished this dangerous gang of six by the single hand of this brave hunter, and, as the 'commerciantio' informed me, he acted as coolly and deliberately as if he were shooting tame bullocks for the market. The affair was rather advantageous to the hunter, for, on searching the saddle-bags and pockets of the robbers, he pulled forth some doubloons, and a few dollars, with other valuables, they had, no doubt, a short time previously, taken from travelers. The saddle-bags, arms and accoutrements of the four white men were made fast on the saddles of two horses, the hunter mounted a third, the merchant another, his horse being shot, and thus they left the scene of action—leaving the bodies of the robbers to the wolves who were howling about them, and entered San Francisco in triumph.

AN IMPORTANT CASE.

We copy the following from the Cincinnati Commercial: A case is now pending before the U. S. Supervising Inspector, E. M. Shield, Esq., coming up on an appeal from the decision of the Local Board of this District, which is of unusual interest to pilots. The steamer Lancaster, No. 4, bound for the Tennessee River with Government stores, having two licensed pilots. The boat reaches a point on the Tennessee River which is infested with guerrillas, who capture and burn two steamers a few miles above the Lancaster. The pilots on the Lancaster refuse to proceed any further on the voyage, demand their money from the clerk of the boat, go ashore, and are afterwards taken prisoners by the guerrillas and paroled.—Upon complaint being made to the Local Board of this District, where the licenses of these pilots emanate, evidence is taken, and the Local Board revoke their licenses to act as pilots. We shall give the testimony and decision as soon as the case is decided.

A PAINTING is on view in Brussels, said to be the work of Raffaelle; it represents the death of St. Joseph, and is about eighteen inches long by sixteen wide. The Abbe Nicolle has the credit of having discovered this work of art at Rome, during the month of May, in the present year.

Life in the Harem.

An English lady, Miss Rogers, sister to the British consul at Damascus, gives some interesting accounts of life in the Eastern harems. Here is something about

THE TOILET OF THE BRIDE.

On subsequent and persevering inquiry among Arab ladies, I found out how it was the bride's face looked so lustrous.—I learn that girls are prepared for marriage with a great deal of ceremony.—There are women who make the beautifying of brides their especial profession.

A widow woman, named Angelina, is the chief artiste in this department of art in Haifa. She uses her scissors and tweezers freely and skilfully to remove superfluous hair, and trains the eyebrows to an arched line, perfecting it with black pigments. She prepares an adhesive plaster of very strong sweet gum, and applies it by degrees all over the body, letting it remain on for a minute or more; then she tears it off quickly, and it brings away with it all the soft down or hair, leaving the skin quite bare, with an unnaturally bright and polished appearance, much admired by Orientals. The face requires very careful manipulation. When women have once submitted to this process, they look frightful, if, from time to time, they do not repeat it; for the hair never grows so soft and fine again. Perhaps this is one of the reasons why aged Arab women, who have quite given up all these adornment, look so haggard and witch-like. In some instances this ordeal slightly irritates the skin, and perfumed sesame or olive oil is applied, or cooling lotions of elder-flower water are used.

The bride invites her friends to accompany her to the public bath previous to the wedding day, and sends to each one a package of henna, two or three pieces of soap, and two wax candles. Angelina is generally the bearer of the message and of these articles, which are always to be paid for. I have now and then accepted such invitations.

Bridal parties assemble and sometimes pass three successive days in the luxury of the Turkish bath. Pipes, sherbet, coffee, and other refreshments are served, and songs are sung in honor of the bride, who is, of course, attended by Angeline, and forms the centre of attraction. Her hair unbraided, she is slowly disrobed, and then, with her loins slightly girded with crimson silk, she is mounted on high clogs, and led through halls and passages gradually increasing in temperature, with fountains overflowing their marble floors; she is lathered with soap, and brushed with a handful of tow, swathed in long towels, and by slow degrees conducted back to a more moderate temperature and lastly to a fountain of cool water. Then, shrouded in muslin, crape, or linen, they sit together, smoking, till they are rested and refreshed.

A HAREM INTERIOR.

Miss Rogers gives a very bright and life-like picture of the interior of the harem of Mahommed Bek Abdul, the governor of Azzebeh, whither she was invited:

They pounced upon me as if I were a new toy for them. They kissed me, one after the other, and stroked my face.—They had never seen a European, and told me that no daughter of the Franks had ever entered the town before.

They said: "Be welcome, oh! sister from a far country; this house is yours, and we are your servants." Then they asked me with whom, and how, and whence I had come? The ladies were full, long trowsers, made of colored silk; short, tight jackets, made of cloth or velvet, embroidered with gold; and flowers and jewels in their head-dresses. The servants wore cotton suits, and the slaves red cloth. They wondered to see my plain, dark riding-dress and hat. I told them I wished to change my clothes, as they were wet.

The boys went to order my portmantean to be brought to the precincts of the harem, and then two slaves fetched it. As soon as I had unlocked it, the ladies, servants, and children, one and all, began examining its contents. In a minute or two it was actually almost empty. Mantles, morning and evening dresses, nightgowns, and collars were passing from hand to hand; and, as the use of them was not known, they were put on all sorts of fantastic ways. One of the girls took a little lace collar and placed it tastefully on her forehead; she thought it was part of a head-dress. I was very much amused, but was obliged to put a stop to their mischief, by telling them to put everything back into the box; they did so directly.—I had already discovered that Arab women are like children; they almost always submit immediately to gentle but unhesitating firmness.

Then I dressed in the same room; for they said they had not any other for their use. I fancy it was because they wished to see all my clothes and how I put them on, theirs being so very different to ours. They told me that I wore too many dresses at the same time. They wear only a shirt open at the bosom, and with long, wide sleeves. Very full trousers, drawn in and tied round the waist and below the knee, but falling in graceful folds nearly to the ground; and an open, short jacket, with a shawl tied round the waist like a sash or girdle. They kindly sent away my wet garments to be dried at the oven, and made a comfortable seat of cushions for me on the floor. One lady made some sweet sherbet of pomegranates and handed it to me. A second brought me coffee in a little china cup without any handle, held in another one (exactly the shape and size of a common egg-cup) made of prettily embossed and chased silver.

CONCERNING the proposed statue to O'Connell in Dublin, Mr. William John Fitzpatrick suggests "that the base might be effectively formed of a large fragment from one of his native mountains. A rugged rock, indented by the waters of the Atlantic, and surmounted by a figure of towering sublimity, would prove, within the ample area of Sackville street, a novel and striking spectacle. A crag is shown at Derrynain on which he loved to stand, contemplating the waves as they rolled in unbroken from Labrador. Would it not be practicable (he asks) to remove so much as would preserve the proportions duly, and carry out the idea which I have ventured to suggest? The cenotaph would thus be a relic as well as a monument." Nearly $2,000 has been already collected for the fund.

The Recent Military Executions in Missouri.

The recent excution of ten men in Missouri, by order of Gen. McNiel, of the Federal army, will be remembered. The Cincinnati Enquirer says:

"We have learned from a gentleman recently from Missouri, an incident of this terrible affair, without the relation of which its history would not be complete. One of the victims selected by McNeil was a man who had a wife and several children depending altogether upon his daily labor for their support. A young man, knowing the condition of the family, offered himself to McNiel as a substitute for the father and was accexcepted and was one of the ten that were shot."

A Positive Witness.

It is of Warren, the author of 'Ten Thousand a year,' that this sharp practice in the examination of a man accused of swearing falsely in a will case is related. It shows great dramatic power unconsciously exhibited in his daily business:

The prisoner being arraigned and the formalities gone through with, the prosecutor, placing his thumb over the seal, held up the will and demanded of the prisoner whether he had seen the testator sign that instrument, to which he promptly answered he had.

And did you see it at his request as subscribing witness?

I did.

Was it sealed with red or black wax.

With read wax.

Did you see him seal it with red wax.

I did.

Where was the testator when he signed and sealed this will?

In his bed.

Pray how long a peace of wax did he use?

About three or four inches?

Who gave the testator this peace of wax?

I did

Where did you get it?

From the drawer in his desk.

Where did he light the peace of wax?

With a candle.

Where did that piece of candle come from?

I got it out of a cupboard in his room.

How long was that piece of candle?

Perhaps four or five inches long.

Who lit it?

I lit it.

What with?

With a match.

Where did you get the match?

On the mantle shelf in his room.

You did?

I did.

Here Warren paused and, fixing his large blue eyes upon the prisoner, he held the paper above his head, his thumb still resting upon the seal, and in a solemn measured tone:

Now, sir, upon your solemn oath, you saw the testator sign that will; he signed it in his bed; at his request you signed it as a subscribing witness; you saw him seal it; it was with red wax he sealed it; a piece of one, two, three or four inches long, he lit that wax with a piece of candle which you procured for him from a cupboard; you lit that candle by a match you found on the mantle shelf?

I did.

Once more sir—upon your solemn oath—you did.

I did.

My Lord—it is a wafer!

The prisioner was covicted.

The Light House Keeper.

A distinguished traveler narrates the following incident:—

"Being at Calais, I climbed up into the light house and conversed with the keeper. 'Suppose,' said I, 'that one of these lights should go out?' 'Never! impossible!' he cried, with a sort of consternation at the hypothesis. 'Sir,' said he, pointing to the ocean, 'yonder, where nothing can be seen, there are ships going by to every part of the world. If, to night, one of my burners were to go out, within six months would come a letter, perhaps from India, perhaps from America, perhaps from some place I never heard of, saying, on such a night the watchman neglected his post and the vessels were in danger. Ah! sir, sometimes in the dark nights, in the stormy weather, I look to sea, and feel as if the eye of the whole world were looking at my light. Go out! Burn dim! Oh! never!'"
