SELECT TALE.

GIVING AWAY THE BABY.

"It was the third day after my husband's funeral," said the widow, "and I was so stunned by his sudden death that I could do nothing but sit and think over it, and try to realize how it could be so. Only the Sunday before, he had been sitting with me, watching the baby, as he sat in the sunshine, laughing and clapping his little hands, as the shadows of the trees were flung across the bare floor, and moved by the passing breeze. Now the child was sitting in the same spot, the warm sun streaming in on his bright curls and making him look so pretty—so like a picture; but the father was gone from us forever.

"It seemed to me I must see his dear face once more—that he would surely lift the latch and come in and say, as he so often did, 'Mother' what would you take for this little bother?'

"Even the baby missed him, and would come and stand at my knee, calling, 'Papa! papa!' until I thought my poor heart would break. The two oldest children were at school; the rest were out playing, so that I was quite alone. By and by the baby was tired of his play, and came and got up into my lap.

"'Mamma cry?—mamma musn't;'' he lisped out, and wiped my wet face with his little chubby hands; but I could only hold him closer to me, and then cry more bitterly.

"Just then Mr. and Mrs. Lorriner drove up in their handsome carriage. They lived not far off and were our richest neighbors. When I had invited them in, and had dried my tears a little, they seemed at a loss how to begin the conversation, but Charlie had slipped away and went and stood at the lady's knee, and pointing to her heavy gold bracelet, said —"Pretty, pretty!" in his childish way.—she took it off, and gave it to Charlie, saying:

"Won't you come to be my little boy, Charlie?"

"My mother's heart took fright at once. They had no children, and I seemed to feel as plainly, as if told me, that they had come to ask for one of mine.

"No, no; mother couldn't spare him,'' I said, quickly, snatching him away, almost rudely, I fear.

"My dear woman,' began Mr. Lorriner, "have you thought seriously of the impossibility of your getting along with five children, under twelve years of age? It has required all your husband's efforts to make a living for you—how can you hope to do it without him?"

"We offer,' joined in his wife, "to take the most helpless of your little ones—to give him all the advantages we would our own child; and surely you see that God's hand is in it—that through us he intends to help you.''

"I need not tell you how long I withstood all their arguments. But at last, overcome by their entreaties, I consented to consider the matter. In two days they came for my answer. I never mentioned their visit to any of the children, and I had changed my mind almost every hour since I had seen them. At last, convinced that it was for the child's good, I consented to give him up. My resolution almost failed me, lingered over every article I put on him, and made every dear curl over and over before I could get it to please me; and I kissed the little white shoulders until they were all rosy. But at length he was ready, and I thought he never looked so pretty. He was full of animation, for he was old enough to know what it meant to 'go riding,' and he clapped his hands and laughed aloud at the horses; as they were driven up, I handed him to his new mother, (the children supposed that he was to come back soon,) and he never looked at me. Oh, how jealous was my aching heart!

"When I came back into the house, the first thing my eye fell on was his cradle. I could only throw myself on it, and sob aloud. Then came the trial of telling the whole truth to the children. None of them seemed reconciled, and I felt that the worst was to come when the two oldest come from school. I almost dreaded to meet them, especially Willie; he was like his father, so quiet and calm outwardly, but hiding beneath his apparent coldness the strongest, deepest feelings. But the others went to meet them as they came home, and I was pleasantly disappointed in the way the oldest took it. He seemed to feel that I had done it for the best, and that he must hide his own sorrow for my sake. He was more thoughtful for my comfort, gentler than ever, only very still and grave.

"The day ended, as the longest will at last, and it came time to go to bed. I had taken Willie to sleep down stairs near me. Since his father's death, the other children slept just above us. Well, when I came to lie down, there was the empty pillow! Baby had always laid his little rosy face as close to mine as he could get it, and slept with one little warm hand on my neck. All my grief broke out afresh when I thought of him. Willie raised up at last, and said earnestly:

"'Mother, it's Charlie you are crying for, isn't it?'

"'Yes,' I answered. 'I know it's for the best; but oh! it's so hard to give him up.'

"'Mother,' continued the child, 'when father died, we knew it was all for the best, because God took him from us; but I've been thinking ever since we laid down how poor little Charlie must be crying for you, and how God gave him to us, to love him and keep him; and how you gave him away. If He had meant him to be Mr. and Mrs. Lorrimer's baby, wouldn't He have given him to them at first?'

"The child's words carried more weight with them than the arguments of my rich neighbors. After considering a moment, I said, impulsively:

"'Oh, if I only had him back, he should never go away again, no matter how poor we might be.'

"The moon was shining so brightly that it was almost as light as day, and presently Willie said:

"'Mother, it's only half a mile across the fields, and they won't go to bed for a long time at Mr. Lorrimer's; let us go and get Charlie. Why, mother, I seem to hear him crying now.'

"Urged by the child's entreaties and the fond promptings of my heart, I consented. I think I never walked a half mile so quickly in my life, and neither of us spoke until we reached the mansion. Then we stopped a moment for breath, and sure enough we could hear the baby screaming at the top of his voice. We went round to the sitting-room door and knocked. They seemed half-frightened when they saw who it was, but raised us in policy. A hired nurse was walking the child up and down the floor, trying to pacify it. Mrs. Lorrimer had wearied herself out, and was lying on the lounge.

"'Come to mother.' Willie said, and he brought the little fellow to me at once.

"How he clung to me, still sobbing, yet smiling all the while to find himself in my arms.

"'I cannot give him up,' I said, at last, when I could get my voice clear. 'You must let me take him home.'

A. D. R.

"They evidently thought me the silliest of women; but their cold words only made me the more determined, and we started back in less than half an hour after we came, I carrying the baby; Willie offered to help me, but I felt as though I could carry him in my arms forever.

"When I laid him in the bed, now fast asleep, but still sobbing, and reaching out his little hands to feel if I was there, I said, 'God helping me, come what will, I will never part with one of my little children again,' and I never did.

JUST BEYOND.

Wayside traveler, worn and weary,
Pause not at the mountain's base;
Though the way seems steep and dreary,
He who runs shall win the race.

Just beyond the lights are gleaming
From my mother's humble cot;
Just beyond bright eyes are beaming;
Onward press and falter not,

Wretched outcast child of sorrow,
Deep in degradation's bond,
Mourn, repent, and on the morrow
Bloom hope's flowers for the beyond.

Sad-browed minstrel, idly dreaming,
Up and work, do not despond;
Though the clouds are dark in seeming,
Yet the stars shine beyond.

Haste, brave men, of every station,
To your country's call respond;
Strike for freedom, save the nation,
Smiling Peace lies just beyond.

Thy drooping spirits, Christian, rally,
Sink not in the slough Despond;
Through the dark and shadowy valley
God and heaven wait just beyond.

Waiting for the Pontoons—Their Arrival—Looking at the Rebels Across the Rappahannock—Fight at Hand—Neutrality—Guarding Houses—Lax Discipline.

Special Correspondence of the Tribune.
RIGHT GRAND DIVISION,
near Falmouth, Va.,
Monday, November 24, 1862.

Still on the North bank of the Rappahannock. Upon the high bluffs, back, a line of three miles, 21 of our guns point threateningly toward the enemy. In the ravines behind them a hundred more wait, ready to be wheeled up and placed in position.

Upon the hills South of the river, distant from 3,000 to 5,000 yards, rebel guns confront them. Some peer blackly thro' hastily-built earthworks; some are just visible over the crest of sharp ridges; some almost hidden by great piles of brush. Already we count eighteen; the commanding will unmask many more.

"Ah, what a sound will rise, how wild and dreary,
When the Death Angel touches those swift keys!
What loud lament and dismal misery
Will mingle with their awful symphonies."

In front of our right batteries, but far below and hidden from them, the antique, narrow, half-ruined village of Falmouth hugs the river. In front of the rebel batteries, in full view from both sides, the broad, well-to do town of Fredericksburg, with its great factories, tall spires and brick buildings, is a tempting target for our guns. The river which flows between [illegible] can throw a stone across.

Behind our batteries and their protecting hills rests the infantry of the Grand Division. Gen. Couch's corps occupies a crescent-shaped valley—a symmetric natural ampitheatre. It is all aglow nightly with a thousand camp-fires; and from the prosceniun-hill of Gen. Howard's headquarters, forms a picture mocking all earthly canvas. Behind the rebel batteries, in the dense forest, their infantry occupies a line five miles long. By night we just detect the glimmer of their fires: by day we see the tall, slender columns of smoke, curling up from their camps. Practiced eyes estimate their numbers from these indications at 40,000 or 50,000.

We have watched a week for the pontoon boats, though Gen. Burnside was promised they should be here simultaneously with his first corps. The brilliant idea of bringing them from Washington, 65 miles over the muddy roads, is worth the eminent professor of the art of How Not to Do It. Governmental minds were apparently ignorant that they could be floated down the Potomac to Belle Plains, only 8 miles from this point.

But last night they were within two miles, so they will not delay us much longer. A few hours will be sufficient for constructing the bridge.

Will the rebels fight the decisive battle here? Many officers believe they will. It seems improbable, for their only advantage is the obstacle they can interpose to our crossing the river; and while a part of our army is engaging them here, the rest may cross, above or below, and flank them.—If they mean to risk a great battle we shall not complain; we are only eight miles from our water base.

In any event there will be artillery fighting before this letter is in print. The women and children came pouring out of Falmouth, yesterday, anticipating the bombardment.

Fredericksburg wishes to remain neutral. It is like nearly all the families we meet. Having contributed everything—clothing, horses, money and men to the rebel army when our troops approach they ask to be treated as neutrals. They illustrate the possibilities of human effrontery.

All the citizens ask to have guards placed over their houses; but very few of them obtain them. "I will give no man a guard," replied Gen. Howard to one of these applicants, "until he is willing to lose as much as I have lost in defending the Government." The Virginian cast one long, lingering look at the General's loose, empty coat-sleeve (he lost his right arm while leading his brigade at Fair Oaks) and went away, the picture of despair.

In several instances guards have been captured by rebel guerrillas, through the direct agency of the families they were protecting. This was the case at the house near White Sulphur Springs, where Col. Carruth, of the 35th Massachusetts, was taken prisoner.

The country bleeds. These Virginians must be terribly in favor of "the Union as it was." Houses are despoiled; sometimes property which cannot be taken away is destroyed in mere wantonness.—Worse yet, there have been instances of the most outrageous conduct toward women. The most of the soldiers behave admirably; a few bring disgrace to the whole.

The orders are rigid enough; they forbid not only soldiers but officers to enter any private house without written permission from their division commander; but they are not enforced. As we have seen, guards cannot be established to prevent the evil. Officers say: "The only remedy is to shoot a few of the worst offenders.—But it is useless to convict soldiers of crimes punishable by death, so long as the sentence cannot be executed without referring it to the President, and he will not approve it." So, discipline relaxes, the army becomes demoralized; in battle the brave and worthy suffer; because the cowardly and unworthy are skulking in the rear and straggling through the country.

A Practical Joker.—By George Vandenhoff.

There was a low comedian familiary called Dick Hoskins, whom I occasionally encountered at several small country theatres, in the North of England, and who was an inveterate and practical joker on the stage. He was always very well-behaved with me, but when he is in contact with a tragedian for whose talents he entertained a contempt, or whose person or manners displeased him, woe to the unhappy subject of his fun. All his tragedy was turned into farce when Dick was in the humorous vein. Thus, he played gravedigger one night at, I think, the Rochdale Theatre, in Lancashire, to the the Hamlet of Mr. C——, a most solemn and mysterious tragedian of the cloak and dagger school.

This gentleman's tragedy was, in Dick's eye, much more intensely comic than his own broadest strokes of the farce; accordingly Dick held no terms with it, and showed the unfortunate object of his mirth no quarter on the stage. When, therefore, Hamlet approached the grave to hold his dialogue with Dick in it, the latter began his antics, and extemporized all sorts of absurd interpolations in the text—which he spoke in his own broad Lancashire dialect. There was not a good house, and Dick allowed himself full license. Mr. C—— scowled fearfully, but Dick was unabashed. At last Dick put a climax on his audacity, 'topped the infinite of insult.'

The theatre was built on the site of an old dissenting chapel, which had formerly stood there, in which a preacher named Banks held forth, and in the small graveyard attached in which, the doctor—for he was popularly dubbed Dr. Banks—had been buried twenty years before; and his name was familiar yet. So, after answering Hamlet's question:—

"How long will a man lie in the earth ere he rot?"

Dick proceeded in due course to illustrate his answer by Yorick's skull, and taking it up, he said, in the words of the text:

"Now, here's a skull that hath lain in the earth three-and-twenty years. Whose do you think it was?"

"Nay, I know not," replied Hamlet, in his sepulchral, tragedy tone.

"This skull, sir," said Dick, pursuing the text thus far, and then making a sudden and most unlooked-for alteration:

"This was Dr. Banks, skull!"

And the word skull he pronounced like a bull.

Of course the house was in an uproar of laughter and confusion. The victimized tragedian stamped and fumed about the stage, as well he might, exclaiming:

"Yorick's, sir; Yorick's!"

"No," said Dick, coolly, when the tumult had subsided, taking up another one and resuming the text.

"This is Yorick's skull, the king's jester; but"—going off again—"t'other's Doctor Banks, as I told you!"

This was too much, this was the last straw on the tragedian's back. He jumped into the grave, seized the (very) low comedian by the throat, and a fearful contest, never before or since, I hope, introduced into the play, ensued, in which [illegible] held down in the grave with one hand, while he flourished 'Dr. Banks' skull' in triumph above his head!

The curtain was dropped, amidst roars and shrieks of laughters in which King, Queen, monks and courtiers—who, in the vain hope of arresting the row, had been sent off with Ophelia's empty coffin —were compelled to join—forming a tableau which finished the play for that night.

Also in all cases of Debility or Nervous Prostration, Hysterics, Palpitations, &c., &c., &c., which are the forerunners of more serious disease.

☞ These Pills are perfectly harmless on the constitution, and may be taken by the most delicate female without causing distress; at the same time they act like a charm, by strengthening, invigorating, and restoring the system to a healthy condition, and by bringing on the monthly period with regularity, no matter from what cause the obstructions may arise. They should, however, not be taken during the first three or four months of pregnancy, though safe at any other time, as miscarriage would be the result.

Each box contains 60 Pills. PRICE ONE DOLLAR, and when desired will be sent by mail pre-paid by any advertised Agent, on receipt of the money.

A FRIEND IN NEED. TRY IT—DR. SWEETS INFALLIBLE LINIMENT is prepared from the recipe of Dr. Stephen Sweet, of Connecticut, the great bone setter, and has been used in his practice for the last twenty years with the most astonishing success. As an external remedy it is without a rival and will alleviate pain more speedily than any other preparation. For all Rheumatic and Nervous Disorders it is truly infallible, and as a cure for Sores, Wounds, Sprains, Bruises, &c., its soothing, healing, and powerful strengthening properties, excite the just wonder and astonishment of all who have ever given it a trial. Over four hundred certificates of remarkable cures, performed by it within the last two years, attest this fact.
