THE FAITHFUL WIFE.

In 1798 M. de Talleyrand was in Boston. One day, whilst crossing the market place; he was compelled to stop by a long row of wagons, all loaded with vegetables.—
The wily courtier, generally so dead to emotions, could not but look with a kind of pleasure at these wagons, and the little wagonera, who, by the by, were young and pretty country women. At last came the day when the fugitive family left the boarding house of Mrs. Muller to go and inhabit their little cottage, where they were to be at last exempt from want, with an only servant, a negro, akind of Jack-o'-all trades, viz: gardener, footman, and cook; the last function, M. de La Tonrodu. "Dearest," continued she, "if you knew how easy it is. We, in a moment, understand what would eost a country womar sometimes one or two years. Now we shall be happy—you no donger will be afraid of snaut for me, now I of doubts about my abilities, of which I will give you many proofs," said she, looking with a bewitching smile at him. "Come, you promised us a salad, and I'm going to bake for to-morrow; the oven is hot. To-day the bread of the town will do—but oh—henceforward leave it to me."

From that moment, Madame de la Tour-du-Pin kept her word; she insisted on go-ing herself to Boston to sell her vegeta-bles and cream cheese. It was on such an errand to town that M. de Talleyrand met her. The day after he went to pay her a visit; and found her in the poultry yard, surrounded by a host of fowls, hungry chickens and pigeons.

She was all she had promised to be.

Besides, her health had been so much ben Besides, her heater had been so much ben-efitted, that she seemed less fatigued by the housework, than if she had attended the balls of the winter. Her beauty, which had been remarkable in the gorge-ous palace of Versailles, was dazzling in her cottage in the New World. And Mi

"Button resided in the town of West Hartford, was a carpenter and joiner by trade, and was particularly noted as a very singular compound, inordinately tond of drink, and in a great degree unsocial, but WINTER CLOAKS, SHAWLS occasionally made "remarks," one of which I am about to relate. He was present at the "raising" of house, and having put himself outside of more whisky than he could hold, with convenience, went inside the frame to rest While sitting there, the rest of the workmen, engaged in the third story, loosened a joist (a stick of timber some two inches by six, and twelve feet in length) and in its transit to the earth from the upper story of the house to the lower one, where Button sat, it took him directly across the ijead. Eevry one supposed that poor Button's "frame" had suffered.

But we were not long in doubt, for looking up he said, with that expression so very peculiar to a "strychninated" man. "I say, yer boss, tell them reprentices careful where the
