DAILY POST.

The Federal Success in Arkansas.

Particulars of the Battle--Terrible Effects of the Gunboats.

The Memphis Bulletin has the following account of the Federal success at Arkansas Post, from persons who arrived from Gen. McClernand's army:

On Saturday the main position of the enemy was attacked with the three ironclad gunboats, Louisville, Cincinnati and Mound City, and three little light drafts.—Arkansas Post is a place situated at a favorable location for defense, on a bend of the river, of irregular, horse shoe shape. It has, for some months, been much boasted of by the Confederates as a place so fortified as to be extremely formidable. At a point one mile below the fort, before the enemy were unable to see what was done, troops were disembarked. Gunboats proceeded up the river, taking positions above the fort as well as below, so as to be able to rake it with their heavy pieces. The land forces, meantime, arrived.

The next morning the land forces found that the enemy, having lost their rifle pits, had thrown up new intrenchments. These they proceeded to attack. Meantime the casual firing of the artillery from gunboats, and in reply, which had been partially suspended by the necessity of supporting the land operations, grew more vigorous, and at one o'clock heavy firing commenced between the fort and gunboats, and was sustained for three hours and a half so incessantly that there were only occasional intervals at which the ear for a second was relieved from the thundering roar.

The easemating of the fort presented a formidable appearance, which seemed to some extent to justify the boasting that had been made of its impenetrability.—There was a thickness of three feet of solid timber, covered with railroad iron, the whole looking as if it could resist the utmost force of cannon shot. To the deep dismay of the defenders of the Post of Arkansas, the balls from the monstrous guns of the boats shattered their most formidable defenses, and penetrated and demolished the strongholds they had reared with so much skill! The battered rails of iron came tumbling down, and the strong ribs of timber were blown with fatal effect among the ranks they were to have saved. Dismounted guns fell into common ruin, proving the dreadful power of gunboats with their mighty armaments.

The second shot fired by the Federals at the commencement of the contest of three hours penetrated a casement of the fort and killed seven men. By another shot one of the enemy's caissons was exploded, causing the death of six men and nine horses. With their casemates demolished, their defences exposed to a raking fire never surpassed for violence, and storming parties closing in upon their ear, but one course was open to the enemy.

After a loss of about 200 men killed, wounded and missing, and somewhat heavier on the part of the attacking party, the commander of the post, Gen. Churchill, surrendered at 4½ o'clock p. m. Gen. McClernand took the whole force, about 4,800 prisoners, 1,800 or 1,400 of whom are on the sick list. The gunboats which had inflicted so much damage escaped without serious injury.

Prisoners declared that if our arrival had been postponed another day they would have given us a much stiffer fight, as large reinforcements would have joined them. In reply to questions as to the number of men and state of fortifications at Pine Bluff and Little Rock, and points on White river, the prisoners advised interrogators to go and count for themselves.

It is thought probable St. Charles, on White river, will be next reduced, then Pine Bluff, and finally Little Rock.

In addition to the above, I have seen a slip from the Memphis Enquirer, which says two regiments of rebels arrived at the fort the morning after the surrender, and entered with flags flying and drums beating, supposing it was still held by the rebels. They were captured, of course, swelling the list of prisoners to something over 5,000.

THURLOW WEED, in the Albany Evening Journal, says:

"Slavery is the cause of the rebellion. Slavery conceived, matured, ripened and precipitated rebellion. Slavery is responsible for this great wickedness and greater calamity. Its utter destruction is a just and only a sufficient penalty. But slavery, unaided, could not have united the whole people of the South in rebellion. It was assisted, as a Governor of South Carolina said, "by their best friends at the North, the Abolitionists." The South, but for such Northern auxiliaries, would have remained divided on the question of disunion. The Union had hosts of devoted friends in Georgia, North Carolina, Tennessee, &c., who would gladly have stood by our flag if our ultra Abolitionists would have allowed its protecting folds to embrace them. But Abolition fanaticism is as senseless in war as it is in peace. Ever wedded to a fallacy, it hugs it to the last." It is not that we have any tenderness for slavery, or would spare it, or lighten any blows that can be struck at it, that we differ with Sumner, Phillips, Gerrit Smith, and Greeley, but because we see, in the ascendancy which their incendiary policy has acquired in the Government and among the people, AN INEVITABLE TRIUMPH FOR REBELLION AND SLAVERY, and the consequent separation of the States, destruction of the Government and ruin of our country. And here, and now, we desire to make a record of this opinion. Time will test—all too soon, we fear—its soundness for its fallacy."

SELECT TALE.

UNCLE ANDY MILLER.

BY JAS. PARISH STEELE.

Among the early settlers of the Far West was Andy Miller; or, as the youngsters called him, Uncle Andy Miller.—He was one of the greatest curiosities of his day; everybody liked him because he liked everybody, and because he was the living embodiment of fun and good nature; that is to say, at certain times. Like very many of the early settlers, Uncle Andy was a true lover of ardent spirits; and it was only after imbibing freely of this elevating agent that he was considered real funny. At all other times generally as sedate as a judge. These "other times" were not suffered to come, however, when the supplies of the market, or the old gentleman's finances, or the finances of his friends were in a condition to have it otherwise.

When Uncle Andy had a few liquors ahead, as the saying is, he called everybody cousin; and, though he would not weigh one hundred pounds, and was one of the most spindling-made old souls you ever saw, he imagined himself a mighty Hercules, and accosted all he met, old or young, with "Gie! Cousin, let's have a rassel;" or "Gie! Cousin, I feel like sunnin' your moccasins for you." The boys would often lock in with him for a good wrestle, and continue the tussel until the old fellow had completely exhausted himself—then they would fall; and, under the impression that he had thrown them, he would feel himself amply compensated for the labor performed; and springing up, would declare himself ready for the next.

On these particular occasions Uncle Andy imagined that he was possessed of extraordinary agility; and that he was capable of performing wonderful gymnastic feats. I recollect one of his performances; a performance that resulted in serious loss to the old citizen. A mere boy, I was passing his cabin one morning on my way to the tan yard to sell Jones, the tanner, a jug of raccoon's oil, and to take in payment therefor a pair of half soles.—Uncle Andy espied me and calculating the contents to be of a different, and to him, more agreeable character, as he called me in.

"I say, cousin," said he, giving me a wink which told as plain as words that steam was pretty well up already, "I say, cousin, let's have a nip at that jug, will you?"

I passed him the jug, and without taking time to smell or otherwise inspect, he drew the cork and elevated it for a big drink. The next thing of which he became sensible was that of having his mouth and throat full of a somewhat unpleasantly flavored liquor, and the next thing he did was to let all holds go of the jug.—Down to the floor it came with a crash, and away went my hopes of a pair of half soles.

Uncle Andy was mad for a few moments but it soon wore off; and, having washed his mouth out with some water, and taken a little from his own jug, together with a chew of tobacco to set the taste all right again, he began to tell me about the astonishing things he could do.

"Gie! cousin," said he, "I can kick the joist."

The joists were poles that reached across the cabin, some eight feet above the floor, and supported the ceiling, or rather the clap-board loft.

I signified my incredulity, and he prepared to show me that I was mistaken.—First he stood upon the floor, flat footed, and kicked as high as he could, which was not high; then he mounted on a chair and kicked. Failing in this instance he placed a second chair on the first and scrambled up. The chairs were old and rickety, which, to say nothing of the oil on the floor, rendered the foundation upon which Uncle Andy stood a somewhat ticklish one. All seemed permanent to him, however, and he kicked. Out flew the props, and down with a sweep came Uncle Andy on top of his breakfast table, upsetting the same and breaking two earthern plates, the only two he possessed in the world. The pewter plates and trenchers were, of course, entirely uninjured.

The loss of those plates was a serious one to Uncle Andy—a loss that he did not get over for many a long day, for earthen ware was a rare article out West in the times of which I write.

Another of Uncle Andy's peculiarities while on a "high," was the continued repetition of a desire to join the Masons.—Still he had a great horror of being seared with a hot iron, a trifle to which he fully believed all candidates for Masonry were forced to submit. Much as he dreaded this, however, he was willing to risk it for the sake of getting in possession of the "secret."

One day several of us youngsters, and a number who were not so young as they might have been had they began life at a later period, concocted a plan to gratify Uncle Andy's curiosity. Having completed the thing, we told him we were members of the Order, and that, seeing that he was such a jam up fellow, we would, if he willed it, put him through.—He willed it, of course, and so we made preparations for the ceremony. A vacant cabin, that had been formerly used as a grocery store, was near by, and to this we repaired with a wash tub, a sheet and two chairs. The tub was filled with water and placed in the centre of the room—the chairs were made to occupy positions touching it on either side. A board was laid across from chair to chair, forming a bridge over the tub, and then all was snugly covered with a sheet. Two presiding officers were next chosen; and after having been topped off with huge paper caps, and duly invested with coats inside out, they were seated in the chairs.

All things being now ready, Uncle Andy was blindfolded and brought into the room, marched around with due solemnity, exposed to divers questions and catechisms, as to age, occupation, character, and so forth, and then requested to take a seat between the presiding officers for further instructions. Previous to this, however, the bandage had been taken from his eyes, and, though not of a suspecting turn, it was easy to see that he looked with something akin to suspicion upon the seat he was requested to occupy. Nevertheless he cautiously lowered himself upon it; all turned out to be solid, and he sat up and received the "further instructions" like a man. He was marched around the room and returned to the same seat several times, until all fears and suspicions were entirely removed, and he sat down with the most unbounded confidence. The pass-word, together with instructions as to how he should do when he wanted to enter a lodge, were then given him, and he was sent out to work his way in. While the sentinels at the door detained him under pretense of not understanding the signs exactly, the board was removed from across the chairs and tub, and the sheet replaced so it looked the same as before. Uncle Andy worked his way in, and, having marched around the room as on former occasions, proceeded, without hesitation, to take his seat between the two chiefs. Very soon after we heard a great splash, and precisely at the time we heard it Uncle Andy found himself sitting in cold water up to his waist. Out he hopped and squared himself for a fight, and it took us some time to persuade him from going in for the chances. After reflecting that all his brethren had gone the same road before him, and that it was not so bad as having the mark of the Order stamped upon his person with a hot iron, say what they would about it, the old gentleman wrung the water from his coat tail, and intimated that the ceremony might proceed.

What Uncle Andy had just enjoyed we termed the first degree; and now we proposed conferring the second. To this end we hoodwinked the candidate a second time, took him out doors, put him through a great variety of exercises, and finally brought him to a stand still on the bank of an old well that had been solidly filled up until it was only about four feet in depth. Three feet of these four were occupied by an odoriferous compound of black mud and green water. Here the ceremonies proceeded in a most solemn manner, and Uncle Andy seemed fairly to enter into the spirit of the thing. It went on for some ten minutes perhaps, when, right in the midst of a pathetic harangue, some one slipped up, and, with an old plowshare which had been near the fire, touched Uncle Andy very gently upon the back. A leap forward, a splash, and the worthy candidate for the mysteries of Masonry stood up to his arms in the pleasant contents of the old well.

That closed the exercises. "By the time Uncle Andy had extricated himself we had very prudently taken ourselves to a safe distance, and we saw no good reason why we should not keep ourselves there for the next twenty-four hours.

When we met Uncle Andy next day it was all right, and he was as good as ever, but from that time nobody ever heard him utter a word on the subject of Masonry. The cure was permanent.

PORK PACKING ITEMS.

Cincinnati.

The principal attention that hogs received today was in connected with the report of the Price Current showing that the points already heard from, the number of hogs packed so far this season exceeds the total of last season 338 947 head. This is not an agreeable fact when the question as to what is to be done with the product is so difficult of solution. The market here to-day remains about the same as it has been for several days.—The receipts published in the table of imports includes over 3 000 head left at Brighton during the week. The number coming in is too small to give much interest to transactio s but prices keep up and averages of 220 to 230 lbs are held at $5. and those of 200 lbs at $4 75.

Milwaukie

Packers made an effort to reduce the price of Hogs, but without much success, as the state of the weather was such as to enable sellers to hold over for this week's market without risk. Prices however, were nominally, at less 10@15c lower. The best offers were $4 70 for heavy averages, except for very choice Lard Hogs, and $4 25@4 60 for fair to good Shipping. The receipts for twenty-four hours amounted to 3,592 hogs, of which 3,250 were dressed and 300 live hogs.

Chicago.

The market for hog product of all kinds was very quiet and almost nominal. Prime Mess, city packed, sold at $11, and country Mess at $10. English Meats were inactive, and sales were confined to 200 boxes short clear middles at 7c.

Lard was quiet but most holders of prime city were asking 9c.

The trains were behind this morning, and sales of Live Hogs at the yards, up to noon, were light, at prices ranging from $3 50@3 90. The warm and wet weather tended to depress the market for dressed hogs, and prices yielded 5@10c per cwt lower. The majority of sales were $4@4 40 for lots dividing on 200 lbs; but where the larger portion were 240 lbs, the inside quotation was reduced 10@15c.

RIVER NEWS

Cincinnati

The river has risen two feet during the twenty-four hours ending yesterday evening. The Lower Ohio, Cumberland and Tennessee are in fine navigable order. With very little tunnage, freights are abundant for Pittsburgh.

The Ohio No. 3, from Marietta, was the only arrival outside the daily packets.

The Imperial and Tycoon left for Memphis—the former in the Government service.

All the boats in port yesterday were taken by the Government. We hear that all that may arrive to day will also be taken for the same service.

The Imperial left for the Lower Mississippi with the 32d Ohio regiment. This regiment recently arrived from Harper's Ferry, and was formerly commanded by Col Thomas Yordi.

Captain Mellon's new packet, Fanny Barker, will be completed by the close of the week.

Capt. John A. Duble is loading his new and splendid side wheel packet, John H. Groesbeck, for Nashville.

The Ohio No. 3, was notified that the Government wants her to go below, and we hear that the St. Patrick, and other packets, will receive similar order to-day, on their arrival here.
