A CHANGE OF PROGRAMME. The Capture of Richmond of No

Consequence. After eighteen months of carnage an

to reach the rebel capital, indications begin to point to the disbanding of our East. ern army. In the West and South, where our Generals were comparatively free from the dictation of the powers at Washington, our arms have been comparatively successful; but in the Eastern division, with , the exception of a few hard fought and dearly won victories under General Mc-Clellan, all has been disaster and death. And all this is to be charged to the bloodless political scoundrels about Washing ton, who have, from the commencemen of hostilities, been plotting against our leading Generals, who would not consent to prostitute the war to suit their infernal purposes. For nearly a year these conspirators in Washington endeavored to their efforts to seduce him from his con-to paying the interest on the State debt, symbol. victions the next thing they resolved upon with a negative recommendation. But now that the radicals have everything their own way in the army of the Potomac, an overwhelming effort is to be made for the reduction of Bichmond. McClellan, Burnsides, Summer and Franklin are removed, and Gen. Hooker the man of men in the absence of Fremont, is in supreme command. In anticipation of a failure under "fighting Joe." the leading Abolition journals, like the Tribune and the Evening Post, which made themselves hoarse with the shout of "on to Richmond, are now engaged in demonstrating that the capture of the rebel capital would be of little consequence advising at the same time the disbanding of the Potomac army, and the reinforcement of our divisions in the South and West. After twenty months of shouting 'on to Richmond'.

The Post now arrives regularly every and after making our failure to capture evening, and is read with interest by its it a pretext for the removal of McClellan, these same partisans (now that they have things just in the condition to suit themselves,) proclaim the difficulty of our army penetrating to Richmond, by prematurely discussing the propriety of abandoning the enterprize altogether.
