friends who know most of his habits. Since the country is, for the present hopelessly given over to the madness of the radicals, we prefer that while the madness lasts there should be some method in it. We are willing to adjourn the emancipation crotchet—now that it has done all the mischief it is capable of doing -until military success shall render it a practical question. If the radicals choose the proclamation, or on the equally striking to make it an issue next year in the presi-contrast between the glowing and golden dential election, we can easily drive them out of power on it; and we may confidently trust to the Supreme Court to undo whatever mischief may, in the meantime, result from its practical enforce nent.—
Thus far, the radicals, though ostensible supporters of the President, have been really in opposition. It was as an opposition party that hounded him into further notice; but there is a truth and vigor n the Tribune's inculpations of the President which commend them to the ministration as now constituted, and this reconciles us even to such a change as the radicals propose. If battles are won; all nait-averted eyes, performs an office which is like uncovering the nakedness of a cism is more likely to succeed than incompetent and muddle headed imbedility.—
